

COAST MINISTER IS OPPOSED TO LIQUOR INTEREST

British Columbia's Attorney-General Says It Defies Will of the People

NO LIMIT PLACED ON PURCHASE OF DRINK

Trade Is Persistently Striving to Make the Province Ever Wetter

Because of the persistence with which the liquor interests in the United States have put forward the system of liquor control in certain provinces in Canada as a model, The Christian Science Monitor recently sent a staff correspondent to the border to make an investigation of conditions there. The result of his investigation appears in a series of articles, the fourth of which is given below.

VICTORIA, B. C. (Staff Correspondence)—British Columbia decided some five years ago to adopt "moderation" with government control of liquor. Today it finds itself with something approaching liquor control of government. This inevitable weakness in the "moderation" system has become more and more apparent of late years until it threatens to be the rock on which the present law will finally founder. Everywhere in British Columbia today is the public conviction that liquor plays far too prominent a part in public affairs; that the politics of the Province is hopelessly entangled with the liquor interests; and that the Province's efforts are being devoted not to temperance, but to the sale of liquor in ever-increasing quantities. In other words, the present government, like any other government dependent for revenue upon liquor and deriving much political patronage from the same source, is not strong enough to handle the evils which flourish under such an arrangement.

Campaign Fund Charges
The insidious inroads of the liquor interests into the public life of this Province began immediately after the experiment in government control was decided upon in 1920. As soon as the plebiscite on this matter was over at the general election of that year, newspapers printed stories, which are generally believed, to the effect that the liquor interests had supplied a large campaign fund to elect certain members to office. This report seemed to be confirmed almost immediately afterward by the demand in the Legislature for the open sale of beer by the glass in spite of the fact that the people had not authorized this scheme in the plebiscite.

For three years this agitation, backed by the brewing interests and others who stood to profit by looser liquor laws, was carried on. Session after session of the Legislature was devoted to the argument on beer, while every kind of influence was brought to bear upon the members to relax the law. Finally in 1923 the water was won with a compromise. The Legislature passed a law providing for a plebiscite on the beer question and which was a greater concession to the brewers—agreed to abide by the result of this vote on the local option basis.

Evidence of Brewing Interest
A few months later the people of the Province were amazed by the crowning evidence that the brewing

Asks Gifts of Bibles for Illinois Prison

MORE Bibles are needed to supply the demand in the Illinois State penitentiary, said William A. Frye, chaplain. Although an Illinois statute requires the State to provide Bibles for every cell, recent demands for more Bibles have not been granted by state authorities on the ground of lack of funds, Mr. Frye stated. "Donations have about kept us even until now," he explained. On account of new demands, however, more gifts of Bibles are now welcomed, he added.

CHAMBER BACKS POINCARÉ PLANS TO SAVE FRANC

Vote of Confidence Succeeded by Another for Quick Action on Finance

PARIS, July 27 (AP)—Raymond Poincaré's new government was given a vote of confidence in the Chamber of Deputies this afternoon. The vote, which came after the reading of the ministerial declaration of policy, was posed on the question of adjourning all interpellations until the financial bill had been discussed and passed. The Premier asked that this be done, and made the matter one of confidence in the Government. The official vote was announced as 358 in favor of the Government and 131 against.

After the vote on postponing interpellations, M. Poincaré introduced his financial bill, which was referred to the finance committee. The Premier asking most urgent consideration of the report. His demand for extraordinary procedure on the bill was put to a vote, requiring the approval of two-thirds of the Chamber.

Important Economies
The Chamber gave him his second victory by voting the urgency of the financial bill, 418 to 31.

The new Poincaré Ministry's declaration of policy began with the affirmation that the Ministry had been formed in a spirit of "national reconciliation" with the object of saving the franc.

"We are profoundly convinced that it is possible to improve the conditions of French finances rapidly, and raise the level of the national currency," the declaration said.

"In order to avert forever fresh dangers of inflation, we propose to vote the indispensable supplementary receipts and make important economies."

After the taxation is to be increased, the declaration said, but at the same time direct taxation will be imposed upon acquired wealth, to form a repayment fund for the national defense bonds.

An appeal was made to "clear-headed patriotism" to shorten the discussion by voluntary discipline. In its first reference to the inter-

Mrs. Ferguson to Resign Post When Special Session Meets

Defeated Texas Governor Calls Legislature to Pass on Validity of State Bonds

AUSTIN, Tex., July 27 (Special)—Closely following announcement of the Texas Election Bureau that Dan Moody, Attorney-General, had a clear majority of 3000 over all five opponents and a lead of 115,800 over Mrs. Miriam Ferguson Governor in the Democratic gubernatorial primary, Mrs. Ferguson called the Texas Legislature to meet in special session Sept. 10 to pass legislation to "validate and legalize" any and all Texas bonds or securities whose validity may have been called in question by any courts and "to make said bonds or securities valid debts and obligations." In her call Mrs. Ferguson invited the Legislature "to make such investigation of any department of the state that the Legislature may desire."

At the same time she announced she will resign when the Legislature has met, has disposed of validation of questioned road bonds, has made any investigations it may desire and has acted on any other matters she may submit for consideration.

As the Texas Legislature cannot remain in session longer than 30 days, this would apparently make Mrs. Ferguson's resignation effective not later than Oct. 15.

Barry Miller of Dallas, Lieutenant-Governor, who has been nominated by the Democrats for re-election, will automatically become Governor and serve until the second Tuesday in January, 1927.

The Governor also announced she would not enter the second primary regardless of whether the final count in the first primary shows Mr. Moody a majority.

She said: "I have determined that the lead of the opposition is so decisive that I would be doing violence to my own interests as well as to interests of the people were I to further insist upon my candidacy, and I have no desire to further embarrass the people in another campaign."

Ninety-eight per cent of the primary vote has been counted and the complete count is expected to show only a slight increase in Mr. Moody's lead.

GOV. BREWSTER URGES GREATER USE OF NATIONAL RESOURCES

Tells Governors' Conference Capacity of American Industry Is Double Quantity Actually Produced—Factories Eager to Employ Labor

CHEYENNE, Wyo., July 27 (AP)—Governments no longer exist merely to preserve order, but to preserve jobs also, in the view of Gov. Ralph O. Brewster of Maine, as expressed at the Governors' Conference in session here.

Most of the Nation's ills are economic, only half of America's industrial capacity is utilized, and states' rights are receding under economic and other pressure, he declares.

"In 1800 governments existed to preserve order," he said. "Today governments exist to preserve jobs. The capacity of our existing industries is double the quantity of things that are actually turned out. Yet the amazing spectacle is presented of 1,000,000 or more men constantly idle, with half used factories and half idle labor."

"The profit system must be made to function smoothly and efficiently, or it will have to go, the Governor declared. "America is groping for a solution of what is, perhaps, the most stupendous problem it has ever faced," he said.

"It is a travesty to talk of Government decentralization when every commercial and industrial interest is more and more intimately alike. The states seem destined to serve their most useful purpose by fully informing themselves concerning the economic problems of their own people and seeing to it that appropriate provision is made for removal of any obstructions to the harmonious functioning of their commercial life."

Sees Need for Enforcement
"Those states which most loudly proclaim the doctrine of state rights in connection with prohibition will feel most heavily the hands of federal officialdom undertaking to carry into effect the law," he declared.

"Unless they provide local prohibition enforcement, they will find the Federal Government encroaching upon their jealously guarded police powers."

"It is well to observe that over half the population of the United States was living under prohibition before the Eighteenth Amendment was adopted and that 95 per cent of the territory was dry. Many of those most active in opposition to state prohibition laws insisted that they would welcome a federal prohibition act."

"The theory of states' rights cannot be permitted to hamper the solution on problems that are all about in myriad fields, such as the radio and aircraft. We must see constant extensions of the federal power. The radio laughs at state bounds."

Governor Brewster expressed the opinion that the Federal Government is 25 years behind the facts in its regulation of interstate commerce.

Explains Road Finance
Western governors and state officials were astonished at the statement of Wellington Wells, president of the Massachusetts State Senate, that the Bay State secured its funds for highway construction from motor vehicle fees, licenses and fines. The statement precipitated a close questioning of Massachusetts system of automobile taxes by western state executives.

"It will not be necessary for Massachusetts to issue bonds for its government financial administration in the future, unless it is visited with special calamity," said Mr. Wells. He outlined the uniform accounting system, inaugurated in the New England towns and cities. The subordinate employees of the State are all under civil service, he said, the governors of several other states querying him extensively on the system.

The Eighteenth Amendment had another staunch supporter in Gov. Walter M. Pierce of Oregon in his address before the conference. "Our people saw, a few years ago, the evils of the liquor traffic and most rightly," he said. "The Eighteenth Amendment became a part of the fundamental laws of our land," Governor Pierce said. "It was clearly seen that in this age of electricity and whirling wheels, man must be free from the fumes of alcohol if he would control and regulate the things he has turned loose in the world."

In commenting on various aspects of the extension of the federal authority, Governor Pierce said: "I often wonder what my grand old predecessor of 40 years ago would do today if he could come back and behold federal officials riding around in automobiles, and more vividly than the question of public domain of the Federal Government, he said. Governor Derr's plea for state rights was based on his construction of what constituted a sovereign state. As it is now, he said, "We do not own the public lands, we have no control over it and it does not pay any taxes to help support our state government. We have to police it, build roads over it and incur other expenditures on account of it. People of eastern states, where 100 per cent of the land is in private ownership and paying taxes, cannot conceive the exasperating burden of making one-fourth of the State support the other three-fourths in idleness."

Gov. John W. Martin, of Florida, assailed the federal inheritance tax as a "flagrant illustration of the usurpation of state authority by the Federal Government forcing the state to make this levy whether they want to or not."

A plea that the state governments adopt a system of accounting that can be readily understood by the "man on the street" was made by W. F. Willoughby, of Washington, D. C., director of the Institute for Government Research. Another advantage would be clarification of financial data for state legislative bodies, Mr. Willoughby asserted. More accurate and more up-to-the-minute governmental information is a necessity, he said, and were these things available now, they would "reveal the changes that are taking place in the Government's financial position and operations."

CARMEN'S WAGE OF 82 1-2 CENTS AN HOUR PROPOSED

Based on $2000 Budget, Says Plea of Men of Eastern Massachusetts Lines

Extended studies of family budgets in Boston and representative parts of the United States, in an attempt to show that wages paid employees of the Eastern Massachusetts Street Railway are insufficient, were presented today by Arthur Sturgis, economic statistician for the carmen, at the second day of a session of the wage arbitration being held at the State House.

Before submitting the budgets, Mr. Sturgis quoted several authorities including Henry Ford, on the subject of wage fixing. Mr. Ford said recently: "All of us are not alike, but few of us like to live this year as we did the past year, and any attempt to fix a living wage applicable to everyone is an insult to both employers and workers."

At present carmen on the Eastern Massachusetts road receive a basic wage of 61 cents an hour, which they wish increased to 74 cents, and operatives of one-man cars want 84 instead of 66 cents. The hearings are before John C. Leggat, judge of the Middlesex Probate Court, as neutral arbiter, with Fred E. Cummings representing the company, and James H. Vahey the carmen.

Boston Budget Ranks High
A budget made up for a family of five, which is the accepted "census" family, Mr. Sturgis continued, shows the cost of maintaining a family in Washington to be $2077 a year at present prices. Another budget for California totaled $2168 for laborers and $3165 for a clerk's family. A recent budget in Boston for postal employees showed the cost of an average family of four to be $2436 annually. A Detroit budget likewise totaled $2059.

Mr. Sturgis added a few wage statistics to those of the opening day of the hearings, showing that workers in the cotton goods industry receive 151 per cent more wages now than in 1913, and on the same basis the wage to Eastern Massachusetts Street Railway employees should be 70.25 cents an hour at present.

Wages in the hosiery and underwear industry are 137.8 per cent higher than 1913; woolen and worsted workers receive 201 per cent more now, or $4.85 cents an hour at the carmen; while an index for railroad employees on March, 1925, was 144 per cent higher than in 1913, or 69.54 cents an hour for the Eastern Massachusetts employees.

Using the railroad employees' wages as a basis, Mr. Sturgis figures the wages on the Eastern Massachusetts during the last 11 years resulted in the employees of the latter road receiving $3854 less than the railroad workers, and if this deficiency were to be made up in the next 11 years, it would mean an increase of 111 per cent.

House Plans Call for Heated Floors

Chicago Board Appropriates $250,000 for Unique Test in De Luxe Home

Special from Monitor Bureau
CHICAGO, July 27—The Lincoln Park Commission have just appropriated $250,000 for the purpose of building what will probably be one of the most—if not the most—unique apartment houses in the United States, as perhaps in the world. It will have heated floors.

Individual heating and ventilating systems will be provided each suite. Food will be prepared in a community kitchen and delivered to the various apartments. It was even rumored that the rooms were to have rubber coverings instead of the usual tile so that the tenants would have warm feet in the morning, but this has been denied—emphatically and categorically. Nothing has been said about hot and cold door knobs, as yet.

There will be swinging rings and parallel bars in each apartment. All rooms will have outside exposure and individual porches.

Oh, yes—Alfred H. Parker, director of the Lincoln Park Zoo, explains that this very unique apartment house will be exclusively for the monkey family.

Roman Catholic Bishops Face Arrest by Mexican Government

Officials May Be Tried for Threats to Use Church Penalties Against Officers Who Enforce Religious Laws—Causes of Present Contest Explained

MEXICO CITY, July 27 (AP)—The eight archbishops of Mexico and the 29 bishops, who signed and issued the pastoral letter addressed to all Mexican Roman Catholics in protest against the new religious regulations, are in danger of arrest.

Representatives of the Government are investigating the letter, and it is asserted that if it is decided the document is seditious, the arrest of the signers will be ordered.

In this letter the Mexican Episcopate announced the withdrawal of priests from all Roman Catholic churches and the suspension of religious ceremonies after July 31. It urged parents to refrain from sending their children to schools where religious instruction was banned. It set forth the numerous penalties which would be applied in the case of those responsible for such regulations against the church or who aided and abetted the Government in putting them into effect.

It is announced that Archbishop

Mora y Del Rio and Bishop Diaz of Tabasco are ready to appear and testify in court at any time they are summoned.

Boycott Leaders Arrested

The League for Defense of Religious Liberty, with three sets of its directors already arrested for urging an economic boycott, is carrying on with a fourth directorate, the members of which are expected to be taken into custody as soon as the police ascertain their names.

Regulations providing for the constitutional prohibition of religious teaching in private schools went into effect yesterday.

The Mexican Government, by officially publishing these regulations, made them automatically operative from the date of official publication. President Calles proclaimed the regulations July 25. The rules prescribe that no minister of any religious cult may act as the director of

Chief Prohibition Enforcement Director

It is understood that one outcome of the pourparlers, which began here July 15 between the chief prohibition enforcement director of the United States and British officials, has been confirmation of the fact that the British Isles in the West Indies were the chief distributing point for contraband liquors.

Anxious to Co-operate

This trade is disapproved of by public opinion here, and the British Government has been anxious throughout to co-operate as far as possible in putting it down, though it is hampered in this by the anxiety of British-shippers lest the searching for liquor should interfere with legitimate trade with South America while in transit through the West Indies.

The object of the present conference has been thus to make as effective as possible existing checks upon the illicit traffic. During the present year, owing to the generous construction placed on the terms of the Anglo-American convention of May 22, 1924, by Sir Esme Howard, the British Ambassador at Washington, rum-running from the Bahamas has been largely circumvented, special facilities having been given American revenue cutters to visit the Antilles to the more effectively with smuggling.

Guaranty Proposed

It has been officially stated that "although some arrests have been made which were not quite within the terms of the treaty, the British Government refrained from protesting, in view of the American laws against the importation of liquor." In 1925, out of the total export of 7,680,000 gallons of spirituous liquors shipped from English and Irish ports, the Bermudas, the Bahamas, the British West Indies, Cuba, Haiti and San Domingo took only 581,472 gallons. How much of this reached American rum-runners is not known, but this outflow and the best means of shutting it off is said to have occupied much of the time of the American and British negotiators in the past ten days.

Another topic of conversation is understood to have been the suggestion for the imposition of a heavy monetary guaranty from owners of legitimately bound liquor-carrying vessels requiring them to deposit a sum in cash equal to the full British domestic excise duty of 23.12s. 6d. on each gallon of whiskey in cargo, the repayment of such sum only to be made on production by the shipper of (a) a certificate of landing in the importing country signed by the proper authority and (b) a certificate that the duty charged by the British Government on liquor for legal consumption had also been paid in cash.

British Are Cordial

For instance, if a shipper of 10,000 gallons of whiskey at St. Pierre or Miquelon, off the coast of Newfoundland, had to deposit $38,000 on prescribed conditions, it is believed there would be no liquor shipped from those remote points for American rumrunners.

This question, it is understood, is to be pressed to adoption at an international conference in Geneva, next September.

The discussions in London have been mainly between Mr. Andrews and his colleagues and representatives of the British Board of Trade, the Admiralty, the Colonial Office, and the customs department, as well as the Foreign Office.

The American prohibition delegates, the Monitor correspondent is in a position to state, are in every way pleased by the British cordiality and desire to co-operate in an effort to secure enforcement of the Volstead Law in United States territory.

Agreement Kept Secret

WASHINGTON, July 27 (AP)—The rum smuggling agreement reached between Lincoln C. Andrews and the British Government is to be kept secret for the present.

The Secretary of State, Frank B. Kellogg, said that "for obvious reasons" it was not desirable to publish the text of the agreement until it had been put into effect. He did not further explain the decision against publishing the conclusions reached by the London conference, but made public instead a review of the negotiations, cast in the most general terms. This review said the decisions were of a "very frank nature" and were directed largely at infractions of the law.

It was added that it was the purpose to pool "information" on the question so that each Government will know what the other is doing "and can render any proper and requisite assistance to the other."

Heavy Monetary Guaranty May Be Asked From the Owners of Liquor-Carrying Vessels

By Cable from Monitor Bureau

LONDON, July 27—Lincoln C. Andrews and other United States prohibition representatives concluded their conference with the British officials at the Foreign Office here today, a complete agreement, a representative of The Christian Science Monitor understands, having been reached. Mr. Andrews leaves tonight for Ireland where he spends some days prior to sailing for the United States next week.

Mr. Andrews interviewed by a representative of The Christian Science Monitor, said his negotiations with the British Government had been going "very happily."

It is understood that one outcome of the pourparlers, which began here July 15 between the chief prohibition enforcement director of the United States and British officials, has been confirmation of the fact that the British Isles in the West Indies were the chief distributing point for contraband liquors.

PRIMARY FUND INVESTIGATION FAR-REACHING

Calls New Witnesses in Move to Trace Expenditures in Illinois Primary

CHICAGO, July 27 (AP)—Having uncovered expenditures of $300,000 on the first day of its inquiry, the Senate Campaign Funds Committee called new witnesses in its effort to follow the trail of money spent on behalf of the candidates of Col. Frank L. Smith and William B. McKinley, incumbent senator.

These included Hermon L. Green, of Urbana, personal attorney and campaign manager for Mr. McKinley in his unsuccessful contest to win the Republican senatorial renomination, and J. W. Stipes, of Champaign, who assisted Mr. Green in the conduct of the campaign.

Another effort also was to be made to elicit from Samuel Insull, Chicago public utilities executive, whether he contributed any funds to the Crowe-Barrett county committee which first supported Mr. Smith, and then switched to Mr. McKinley, who is chairman of the Illinois Commerce Commission.

When asked whether he gave any money to this committee, Mr. Insull declined to answer until he had opportunity to confer with his counsel. He said he expected to be ready at once to inform the committee whether he would answer that question.

Admits $125,000 Gift
Before requesting time to consult his attorney on that score, Mr. Insull frankly told the Senate investigators that he had contributed $125,000 to Mr. Smith's campaign and had given $15,000 to "my old friend George Brennan," Democratic national committeeman from Illinois who won the Democratic senatorial nomination in the April primary.

In addition he told of spending $34,734.85 during the campaign on propaganda against the World Court, and conceded that the undoubtedly benefited the candidacy of Mr. Smith, who ran on an anti-World Court platform, and frequently assailed Mr. McKinley for his vote for American adherence to the international tribunal.

After Mr. Insull had declined to answer immediately on the question of contributions to the Crowe-Barrett committee, James A. Reed (D), Senator from Missouri, the committee chairman, said that in addition to that information, the investigation desired to know whether the traction executive contributed funds to any other organization during the primary contest as well as names, amounts and the purposes for which the funds were given.

Before Mr. Insull took the stand, Allen F. Moore of Monticello, campaign manager for Mr. Smith, declined to give the names of men who contributed to the Smith campaign other than those of Mr. Insull and himself.

Calls Gifts Confidential
He said the contributions were "confidential," but Mr. Reed disagreed, asserting that expenditures on behalf of a candidate for the Senate constituted a matter of public interest. Mr. Moore was excused until the question of the authority of the committee to require an answer as to the names of contributors is settled.

At that time the Smith manager, who is a former member of Congress and Republican national committeeman for Illinois, is to produce his private memoranda, which were in code, and other documents relating to expenditures in the primary. Mr. Moore told the committee that the total sum used in the Smith campaign was $253,547.51. Mr. Brennan testified that he expended about $20,000, while Chester A. Willoughby, secretary to Mr. McKinley, declared that as a manager of the McKinley campaign in Cook (Chicago) and other counties he distributed between $50,000 and $55,000, of which $17,000 went for the pay of watchers in 17 of the 50 wards in Chicago.

Mr. Willoughby could not say what was the total expended on behalf of allied debts, the declaration said: "The nations which are our creditors, and whom France has the firm will to pay within every measure of her capacity, have as great an interest as ourselves that we should, before everything, put an end to the monetary crisis. This crisis is due to multiple causes but it is in no way impossible to calm its violence and to annihilate its dangerous effects."

In conclusion the declaration said: "France has known graver and more painful trials than the present. She saved herself by union and energy. Today again victory is subordinate to the same conditions. Let us immediately begin the heavy task, for the Republic, for the country!"

M. Poincaré was greeted at the opening of the Chamber's session by an uproar among the Communists which lasted 15 minutes. The Chamber was only quieted when the deputies of the Right and Center threatened to expel the manifestants, and the president of the Chamber, Raoul Ferey, declared he would suspend the sitting if order was not restored.

Poincaré Proposals Call for Additional Taxation
By SISLEY HUDDLESTON
By Special Cable

PARIS, July 27—After the diplomatic Locarno, France has a political Locarno. With few exceptions the parliamentary groups have rallied around the Poincaré Government which presented itself today with an eagerly awaited declaration before the Chamber and Senate. The declaration was devoted to the financial question, of which a solution is believed assured.

The criticisms first heard from opposition sides have diminished, for nothing succeeds like success, and the rapid improvement of the franc is a welcome change after many months of continuous depreciation. Whatever be the future of the Poincaré agreement, it certainly has begun by a restoration of confidence which political instability had shattered.

The proposals call for 2,500,000,000 francs extra taxation this year, and 5,000,000,000 francs more next. There is no magic way of obtaining resources. The saving up of taxation is the only method.

ROMAN CATHOLIC BISHOPS FACE ARREST BY MEXICAN OFFICERS

or teacher in a private school. The schools are forbidden to have any chapels or other places of worship or to have anywhere any pictures, statues, images, stamps or objects of a religious nature. The Secretary of Education is empowered to close schools violating the regulations.

Official Views
In official circles, it was stated, that the Calles Administration was prompted to order the enforcement of the religious regulations because President Calles asserted the Roman Catholic Church was, and has been since Mexico's independence from Spain, endeavoring to participate in and control Mexican political affairs.

In these circles it is said that enforcement of the regulations will prevent reactionary politicians from hampering the Government in the fulfillment of its reconstructive program.

For more than 50 years there have been acute periodic differences between the Mexican Government and the Roman Catholic Church. The Government's determination to strip the church of power and property in Mexico began six years ago, after the reform of 1855-1861—and has been a contributing factor, historians say, in others of the succession of wars and revolutions that have given Mexico so much turbulence.

War of Religion
Wars have been waged in the name of religion in Mexico for more than 400 years. When Cortez, the Spanish conquistador, came here 400 years ago, he found native tribes fighting each other both for territorial aggrandizement and for the glory of their various pagan gods. The Spaniards wiped out all these religions and substituted Roman Catholicism.

During subsequent centuries, the Roman Catholic Church became tremendously rich and powerful in Mexico. It was the religious center of the country, and its power was based on the fact that it was the only church in Mexico that was not strictly enforced. All property of the church, however, continued by law to belong to the Government.

After the 1910-20 revolutionary period, President Obregon began enforcing the religious clauses. President Calles has continued that enforcement. In January, 1925, President Obregon expelled the papal nuncio, Monsignor Filippi, upon the charge of conducting a religious ceremony in disobedience of the constitutional prohibition. Later that year another papal nuncio, Monsignor Cimino was sent to Mexico by the Vatican and the Mexican Government requested Rome to recall him, which was done.

Papal Nuncio Deported
This year Monsignor Caruana, an American citizen, was sent here as papal nuncio and was deported upon the charge by the Mexican Government that he entered the country improperly by not disclosing his identity at the border.

The schismatic church, which calls itself Catholic, with independence of Rome and denial of the Pope, was organized here last year with the avowed purpose of making all Catholicism in Mexico devoid of Vatican connection. High dignitaries in Mexico of the Roman church denounced the movement, declaring that they would always recognize only one superior authority—the Pope.

The present wave of strict enforcement of the religious clauses of the constitution began in February after the Archbishop of Mexico, Mora del Rio, was arrested on a charge of the Roman Church, and denies the Pope's authority. Most Mexicans, however, continue to be members of the Roman Catholic Church.

This apparent anomaly of an anti-Catholic government policy in a country where most persons are Roman Catholics is difficult to explain, or even to theorize about, without entering the field of controversy. Few of the presidents or government leaders of Mexico, since independence, have continued in adult life to be in practice devoted Roman Catholics, although as children they may have been taken into the church. Most of them have indicated they believed the Roman Catholic Church had attained a power, material and political, too great for the good of Mexico.

Church Officers Banned
In 1861, after the reform war, the confiscation of Roman Catholic Church property and the limiting of the clergy's functions, the Government of Benito Juarez, successful leader of the contest against the church, banished the papal nuncio from Mexico. Between 1872 and 1875 the only then remaining religious order in Mexico, the Sisters of Charity, was suppressed by the Government. In 1876 Gen. Porfirio Diaz became President.

During the period between the reform war and the ascendancy of Diaz the Roman Catholic Church knew its darkest days in Mexico. President Diaz was not a professed Roman Catholic, but his wife was, as are most Mexican women. During his régime, although the religious clauses remained in the Constitution, they were not strictly enforced. All property of the church, however, continued by law to belong to the Government.

After the 1910-20 revolutionary period, President Obregon began enforcing the religious clauses. President Calles has continued that enforcement. In January, 1925, President Obregon expelled the papal nuncio, Monsignor Filippi, upon the charge of conducting a religious ceremony in disobedience of the constitutional prohibition. criticizing the Government, which the Constitution forbids churchmen doing. The complaint was based upon a K. L. City newspaper interview which the Archbishop repudiated, and he was dismissed. Since that time the Government has been deporting foreign ministers, principally Spanish Catholic Priests, and closing Roman Catholic schools and churches accused of violating the Constitution.

Vatican Answers President
ROME, July 27 (AP)—The Vatican believes that the statement given to the Mexico City newspapers by President Calles regarding the forthcoming religious regulations will merely have the effect of intensifying the sympathy of the entire Roman Catholic world for their Mexican brethren on Aug. 1, when the regulations go into effect.

The gist of the President's declaration was communicated by the Associated Press to the Vatican authorities, who authorized the statement that it was "a perversion of the actual facts." The allegation that the Roman Catholic Church had engaged in political activities in Mexico was termed "utterly false and unfounded."

It was stated that the Pope would be informed of the declarations, but that it was not known whether he would decide to take public recognition of them.

GAS PRICES LOWER IN THE NEAR FUTURE, SAYS OIL PRESIDENT

Special from Monitor Bureau
CHICAGO, July 27—The price of gasoline to the consumer will be reduced "between now and the middle of September," according to a prediction here by L. V. Nicholas, president of the National Petroleum Marketers Association.

"A break in the price of crude oil can hardly be avoided between now and the first of the fifteenth of September," he declared, in commenting on the gasoline market. "The sooner it comes the less likelihood there will be of serious market demoralization. We are drawing in finished gasoline, crude oil is in oversupply and stocks are increasing at an alarming rate."

The president of this association of independent oil dealers continued: "Keep this constantly in mind: There is an enormous stock of finished gasoline on hand. There is more than an ample supply of crude oil. Development of the cracking process has increased the yield of gasoline, and the industry's struggle for some time to come is bound to be a battle to curb the constantly increasing tendency to overproduce gasoline."

LINCOLN PAPERS TO GO TO PUBLIC

Son of Civil War President Orders Them Released in 21 Years

Special from Monitor Bureau
WASHINGTON, July 27—Correspondence of an extraordinarily important character, now in the possession of the Library of Congress, will be released for the benefit of the public in 1947.

With the passing on of Robert T. Lincoln, son of Abraham Lincoln, this becomes effective. Included in the collection in the Library are, not only letters from Abraham Lincoln but thousands of letters to him covering one of the most interesting periods of American history. That these letters should not be published within a time that would prove embarrassing in any way to their writers or to their immediate families, Robert T. Lincoln placed the time limit of 21 years after he had gone for making them public.

The letters have been in the custody of the library for some time, were there several years before Mr. Lincoln made an agreement presenting the papers to the Government of the United States and stipulating that they were to remain in the possession of the library under seal, no one to have access to them.

It is similar to the arrangement that Mrs. Woodrow Wilson has with the Library of Congress regarding letters of Mr. Wilson now deposited there except that they are to be given to the library, not to the Government, after she has passed on. The letters, pamphlets and documents contained in the Lincoln collection were those in his possession in the Civil War period at the time of his assassination. The more important letters written by Lincoln were published in the "Life of Lincoln" written by John Hay and

Better Business Bureau Or- ganizes for Year of Re- doubled Activity

Preparations for a year of redoubled activity are now being planned by the newly appointed committees of the Boston Better Business Bureau with offices at 201 Devonshire Street and of which John Richardson, Boston lawyer, is the president. Mr. Richardson, who became president of the bureau on May 5, announced today the membership of the six leading committees which will have charge of the active work of the organization for the year.

It was announced by Kenneth B. Backman, manager of the bureau, that it has been decided to make a thorough investigation of the mail order business as present conducted widely throughout the country.

The bureau through its representatives will make tests of the products offered for purchase through the mails and determine if the goods so bought comply with the promises made in the advertisements. In case any such do not conform with what is stated for them publishers of advertisements of merchandise failing to be as represented will be informed of the facts and asked to refuse further publicity.

Campaign to Be Resumed
The campaign of protection the bureau ran last year as a result of which many jewelry auction concerns in Boston closed their doors, is to be resumed as a means of protecting the public.

The bureau will continue its activity in the protection of the land purchaser. Last year the bureau assisted in operations which resulted in preventing no less than 39 operations in fraudulent stock transactions.

The committees named by Mr. Richardson to conduct the various constructive activities of the Boston Better Business Bureau are as follows:

Executive: George B. Johnson, chairman, president R. H. White Company; Louis E. Kirstein, vice-president; William Filene's Sons Company; William W. Rogers, advertising manager; Boston Evening Transcript; F. W. Denio, vice-president; Old Colony Trust Company; Robert S. Weeks, Harris, Forbes & Co.

Merchandise: Felix Vorenberg, chairman, president, Gilchrist Company; Richard J. Rogers, vice-president; Jordan Marsh Company; Arthur M. Horne, treasurer, Shreve, Crump & Low; James F. Leary, vice-president, Houghton & Dutton Company; Gordon K. Creighton, vice-president and assistant treasurer, E. T. Slater Company.

Investment: Bankers and brokers; Pliny Jewell, chairman, vice-president, Coffin & Burr, Inc.; Jere A. Downs, Hayden, Stone Company; Ralph Hornblower, Hornblower & Weeks; Frank W. Remick, Kidder, Peabody & Co.; C. E. Cotting, Lee Higginson & Co.

Publicity Committee:
Publicity: Hugh Bancroft, chairman, Boston News Bureau; Paul Terrell, sales manager Houghton & Dutton Co.; Frank Black, advertising director William Filene's Sons Co.; Allen H. Wood, president Wood, Patnam & Wood Co.; Beatty Stevens, advertising and sales manager The Shepard Stores.

Savings Banks: Carl M. Spencer, chairman, president Home Savings Bank; William D. Clark Jr., treasurer, Lynn Institute of Savings; George E. Taber, treasurer, Widely Savings Bank; Joseph H. Sullivan, president Franklin Savings Bank.

Finance: Sidney S. Conrad, chairman, Conrad & Co.; Louis E. Kirstein; Edgar D. Shaw, publisher Boston American and Boston Advertiser; Joseph W. Hill, Boston Street, Boston; Louis Hunter, vice-president National Shawmut Bank.

B. F. Keith's Theater

The acts appearing at B. F. Keith's this week are all well worth witnessing. Van Cello and Mary open the show with some clever "Foot Feets," balancing various barrels on his feet with ease and grace. Lillian Roth then sings some of her new numbers, her character ballad being the hit of the evening. She is followed by Paul Yocan in a pleasing and colorful dance revue, in which he is assisted by Evelyn Saeffer, Eunice Schramm, and Jack Cooney. Lew Oliver and Gene Olsen then put over a series of smiles in a laughable manner. George Ford and Flo Cunningham are first rate entertainers in an argumentative dialogue that contains many laughs. Ida May Chadwick, tap dancer, headlines the bill, assisted by six unusually good dancers, though Miss Chadwick's work is in a class by itself. Adlai Well and Herman, billed as the California Humming Birds, stopped the show with many original songs, introducing several novelties. The Blum Trio closed the bill in a series of gymnastic poses that showed thorough training.

Copley Theater

Copley Theater—The resident company, E. M. Olive, director, appears this week in "On the Hired Line," a farce in three acts by Harvey O'Higgins and Harriet Ford. The cast:

Bernard Fessenden...C. Wordley Hulse
Dorothy...Miss. Charles
Steve Mack...Edmund George
Katharine Standing...Katharine Standing
Donald Oliver...Donald Oliver
Patsy Capron...Patsy Capron
Victor Lyons...Victor Lyons
Ruth Tandy...Ruth Tandy
Mrs. Ritchie...Mrs. Ritchie
Norman Cannon...Norman Cannon

Nothing but laughter awaits the Copley patrons this week. For they will see the potentially comic spectacle of the husband who thinks he can outwit his wife. On time alone we know he will be defeated, for while he is in the city during the day she can apply herself to the game, continuing "far into the night." It is necessary, to win, Katherine Standing, as the wily wife of Bernard Fessenden, kept things in a whirl by making each new lot of servants so discontented they would not stay at the Fessenden home in the country. Sooner or later she will have her way and move back to the city.

For a time she is baffled by a butler and cook who refuse to be discharged, but eventually she discovers that they are detectives hired by her husband. They know nothing of the husband's reasons for engaging them, and naturally proceed with their "detecting," with the result that the household is soon in an uproar of suspicions and false charges. The proceedings are howlingly funny.

C. Wordley Hulse always plays ridiculous personages with a serious air that gives the humor full force, and he was well seconded by Norman Cannon as the friend of the family and Alan Mowbray as an actor guest who has an unhappy week-end because of his over-energetic gardening and his innocent entanglement with the detectives' clues. Miss Edie Tandy as the butler-detective was amusingly gloomy in his snooping. Next week, "Meet the Wife," farce with Jessamine Newcombe in the lead.

Metropolitan Theater

Bebe Daniels' latest picture, "The Palm Beach Girl," provides the feature this week at the Metropolitan Theater. It offers the action play for her athletic prowess and personal charm as a girl from Iowa who wins her way in the Florida smart set after an amusingly gawky beginning. There are stirring speed boat races, and many brisk episodes sparkling in a small part and Victor Tandy as the butler-detective was amusingly gloomy in his snooping. Next week, "Meet the Wife," farce with Jessamine Newcombe in the lead.

SEVEN WIN TRIP TO DE MOLAY CAMP AT BEAR LAKE, COLO.

Were Selected From More Than 400 Entrants From
29 States and Canada

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 27 (Special)—Seven winners in the annual representative contest of the Order of De Molay will attend the Third National Leaders' Training Camp of De Molay at Bear Lake, Colo., Aug. 27 to Sept. 4, with all expenses paid. It is announced at national headquarters of the order here. The seven were selected from more than 400 young De Molays who entered the annual contest. The list of winners was made extended, including about 30 youths from 29 states, Canada and the Panama Canal Zone. Those awarded the free trip to the training camp were chosen from the list by lot.

Winning a place in the representative contest requires a high standing in various activities of the Order of De Molay, including religious, educational and fraternal work, together with civic and athletic activities. To be named a winner, a youth must have not only excellent standing in his chapter of the order but must have gained recognition through activity in civic and community affairs.

Those awarded the training camp trip are John R. Brimer, Denver, Colo.; William R. Croscup, Beverly, Mass.; Elmer H. Gabel, Muscatine, Ia.; Harry N. Hill, McKeesport, Pa.; Robert S. Latta, Hastings, Neb.; Russell B. McNeill, Kenton, W. Va.; Lewis E. Seiders, Kansas City, Mo. Judges in the contest were Dr. James A. Nalimith, University of Kansas, the originator of the game of basketball in 1891; Dr. David C. Bayless of Des Moines, secretary of the Humphreys Foundation; W. F. Osmond of Kansas City, assistant secretary of the Scottish Rite bodies and member Grand Council of De Molay. All the judges are active in Freemasonry. The representative contest is conducted by the Grand Council, governing body of De Molay, composed of Masonic leaders from various states.

NORTH ADAMS COTTON MILL STRIKE SETTLED

NORTH ADAMS, Mass., July 27 (AP)—A five weeks' strike of 600 members of the Polish Weavers' Union, which tied up the Berkshire Cotton Manufacturing Company's plant here and threw 3000 employees out of work, was settled last night after an all-day conference between mill officials and employees' representatives.

The strike, constituting the first labor trouble in the 75 years of the company's existence, was called when the company attempted to inaugurate a so-called three-frame schedule, whereby speeder tenders would operate three frames instead of two.

By the terms of the settlement, the employees will return to work on the old two-frame basis, with a provision that each department will agree to arbitrate all future disputes over manufacturing processes. In case of a disagreement, the dispute will be passed on by a committee representing all departments.

FRUIT PRODUCERS TO STUDY PROBLEMS

The Massachusetts Fruit Growers' Association and Middlesex and Worcester County extension services are to hold an all-day meeting Thursday, Aug. 5, at the farm of Harold A. Bland in Gloucester. The meeting is expected that it will be one of the most important educational field meetings for fruit growers ever held in this section of New England.

Prof. G. W. Peck of Cornell University, extension promoter for the State of New York, will speak on production, and E. H. J. Hearty of Maynard and Child's Commission House, New York City, will talk about marketing. He will point out the opportunities of selling Massachusetts fruit in the New York market. Lunch will be served at noon and in the afternoon a visit will be made to Clement Brothers' orchards in West Acton.

PORTLAND POWER PLANT PLANNED

Insult Interest Seek To Ob- tain Control of Cum- berland Company

AUGUSTA, July 27 (Special)—Erection of a huge steam generating plant in Portland to supply power needs of northern New England is one possibility for that city, provided the Insults obtain control of the Cumberland County Power and Light Company. Walter S. Wyman, president of the Central Maine Power Company, said on his return from a conference in Boston with Mart's Insult, head of the Middlewest Utilities Company.

Mr. Wyman was unable to state whether the deal in which the Insults are reported ready to buy the $95,000,000 National Electric Power Company from the Emanuel Group had been completed, but he admitted that negotiations along this way were under way.

Mr. Wyman also says he had been in conference recently with the president of one of the largest industrial groups in the United States, who was seeking information on the power possibilities of Maine. This man desired a site where 250,000 horsepower could be developed near deep water facilities. On being told that this amount of energy is available in Maine on one of the finest harbors on the Atlantic coast he expressed the deepest interest, according to Mr. Wyman, and promised to come here after a trip to Europe, being made in the interest of his new venture.

"Portland's fine harbor will prove a big asset to her if the Insults do take over the Cumberland County power properties," said Mr. Wyman. "The Insults are all European and American shipping ports it can be readily made use of for many enterprises. Many parts of northern New England are greatly in need of electric power and this can be furnished from Portland by the erection of a huge steam plant."

"Both coal and oil can be landed at the water's edge in Portland Harbor as economically as any port in the east. With this important item of cost cut down to such a low figure, the Portland plant could compete with any other city."

clared by Board of Directors

The general readjustment committee of the B. & M. Railroad at a meeting yesterday voted to declare the reorganization plan operative, and the board of directors of the company, also at a meeting yesterday approved this action.

The board of directors having considered the earnings for the six months from Jan. 1 to June 30, 1926, declared out of such earnings the semi-annual dividend for that period on the first preferred stock of the company, payable Aug. 15, 1926, to stockholders of record July 13, 1926, the amounts to be as follows: Class A first preferred, $2.50; Class B first preferred, $4.00; Class C first preferred, $3.50; Class D first preferred, $2.25.

Prior to the meeting Edmund D. Codman today notified Homer Loring, chairman of the board of directors of the railroad, that he had filed an appeal from the decision of Division 4 of the Interstate Commerce in the matter of the Boston & Maine reorganization.

CALIFORNIA BONDED DEBT SHOWS INCREASE

Cities of State Seem to Do
Better Than Elsewhere

SAN FRANCISCO (Staff Correspondence)—The total bonded debt of California has reached a record of $609,549,271, Ray L. Riley, state controller, states in a report. This shows an increase during the year of $76,249,000, considered by some financial experts prohibitive according to sound business practice.

Figured in another way, these figures represent 54 per cent increase over the total of 1911. The assessed value of non-operative property, liable for the interest and redemption of bonds, advanced 140 per cent. The total debt represents 10.5 of the aggregate assessed value of non-operative property as compared with 4.5 per cent in 1911. Cities show greatest conservatism, increasing the debt only 331 per cent, counties 905 per cent and the state 1650 per cent over the totals of 1911.

The annual report of the Detroit Bureau of Governmental Research on the bonded debt of 310 cities in the United States and Canada, indicates that as a rule cities are adding to, rather than subtracting from, their debt burdens, and that the larger cities are using their credit more freely than the smaller ones, said William H. Nanny, director of the San Francisco Bureau of Governmental Research, in commenting on the subject of bonded indebtedness.

AMHERST FARM COUNCIL OPENS

M. A. C. to Hear Experts on Rural Problems

AMHERST, Mass., July 27 (AP)—Farmers of both sexes from all parts of the State flocked to Massachusetts Agricultural College today for the opening of the annual Farm and Home Week, and topics ranging from home budgets and insect pests to rural ministers vied with one another in interest.

"Bugs" seemed to be the most popular subject to the small army of fruit growers, and a genuine pest hunt with competitive features was conducted through the college orchards, led by such experts as Professors F. C. Sears, Ralph A. Van Meter, and William D. Dora. Each group will report its success at a dinner tonight.

The women's program opened with a practical talk by Mrs. Myrtle Van Deusen Rouse of Hays, Kas. on three meals a day on a limited income.

Beef cattle and sheep will have an important place on the program Wednesday as there is a considerable revival of interest in both these farm projects, which all but disappeared in Massachusetts and are now coming back strongly.

In the dairy program Thursday one of the most interesting discussions will be led by Prof. J. H. Franden of the college on the competition of western milk and what New England dairymen must do to compete with it.

Poultry men will have full programs Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. One of the warmest discussions will undoubtedly be over an address by Rob Slocum of the United States Department of Agriculture, taking up the question of whether western egg producers are preparing to make a drive on eastern markets and force out the nearby poultrymen.

The program also includes sessions devoted to forestry on Thursday, to beekeeping on Thursday, to flower growing today and home gardening on Wednesday.

The extension service has made arrangements to make the week a pleasant social gathering as well as one for instruction and demonstration. Invitations sent broadcast over the State have caused large parties to be dispatched to every county, to drive to Amherst.

PHILPS OPENS HEADQUARTERS

Roswell F. Phelps, director of the division of statistics in the State Department of Labor and Industries, and his staff of the Department of Labor and Industries, today announced that in order that his candidacy for office may not conflict with his duties at the State House, he has opened campaign headquarters in Room 202, Hotel Bellevue.

Prizes to Marblehead Artists Awarded at Annual Exhibition

Mary Bradish Titcomb, Francis J. Flanagan, Harry Powers Win in Order Named for Best Work of General Merit—Craftsmen to Have Next Show

These studios are really workshops and the number of Marblehead subjects in the exhibition testify to the appreciation of the artists of the picturesque quality of their surroundings.

The list of railroad equipment obligations which tomorrow will be legal investments for the savings banks of Massachusetts was announced today by Roy A. Hovey, State Commissioner of Banks.

Investment by savings banks in railroad equipment securities has been a financial question subject to great controversy in Massachusetts and other states for several years. The law which goes into operation tomorrow was vigorously argued by the 1926 Marblehead Legislature which passed the bill which was vetoed by Governor Fuller.

The measure differed from pending statutes in that it did not provide that the equipment certificates be guaranteed. At that time Governor Fuller pointed out that the guarantee certificate was required. At this year's session the measure was amended from was again introduced, passed by both houses, and signed by the Governor.

The new law opens a wide field for investment to Massachusetts savings banks and it is believed to be a very important step in their financial development. Savings banks in the State strongly favored the legislation when it was under consideration.

Mr. Hovey made public a list of railroad equipment securities of 15 different railroads which may be invested in. The list includes the Atlantic Coast Line, Central Railroad of New Jersey, Chicago and Northwestern, Great Northern, Illinois Central, Louisville and Nashville, Middlesex Central, Mobile and Ohio, Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis, New York Central, Norfolk and Western, Northern Pacific, and the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie.

PARTY SLATES ABOUT FILLED

Colonel Gaston for Gov- ernor and Mr. Walsh for Senate Announced

Massachusetts' 1926 political campaign and subsequent election of Governor and Senate members that Col. William A. Gaston of Boston will be the Democratic organization's candidate for Governor this fall, and that David I. Walsh will run for the United States Senate, and that the Republican and Democratic slates are now complete.

On the Republican side of the fence are William M. Butler, candidate for the remaining two years of the unexpired senatorial term of Henry Cabot Lodge; Alvan T. Fuller, candidate for the unexpired term of Senator Frank G. Allen for Lieutenant-Governor. All three base their campaign appeals on their records.

Mr. Butler is chairman of the Republican National Committee and is recognized as one of the strongest and ablest of the party's leaders. In his own right, he has won a prominent place in the Senate during the session just adjourned, when he served as an appointee of Channing H. Cox, former Massachusetts Governor. He is a supporter of the League of Nations and favored adherence of the United States to the World Court.

Mr. Fuller's Position
Mr. Fuller is now concluding two years in the executive chair. He has long been known for his independent, and has not hesitated to depart from the councils of old-line Republicans if he felt it advisable. This characteristic has brought him into temporary disagreement with organization leaders, but it is felt that his position with the voters has been strengthened thereby. He supports the prohibition law and in state administration has been a consistent advocate of economy and efficiency in government. Under his administration the state tax has been kept down to $15,000,000 both years.

Frank G. Allen, present Lieutenant-Governor and prospective Democratic candidate in 1926, is strongly supported by the Republican Party organization for re-election and has great popularity throughout the state. He was an able president of the State Senate for several years.

Two leading Democratic candidates are now definitely named. David I. Walsh will continue for the Senate, in which he served from 1913 to 1925. He was Governor of Massachusetts in 1914 and 1915, and in gaining election to the Senate defeated John W. Weeks. He is regarded as a strong candidate.

Colonel Gaston's Record
Mr. Walsh's companion on the State ticket, Col. William A. Gaston, was a candidate for the Senate against Henry Cabot Lodge in 1922, when he was defeated by a very narrow margin. He was his party's candidate for Governor twice, in 1906 and 1910, but was defeated both times. His father served as Governor of the Commonwealth in 1875. He is senior member of the law firm of Gaston, Snow, Ballou, Hall & Hunt, and has been active in many financial enterprises.

Joseph R. Ely of Westfield will be urged to be Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor. Previous to Colonel Gaston's announcement he had contemplated standing for the governorship, but many expect that he will accept second place on the ticket. Mr. Ely is in Europe and will return in August. Negotiations with him are being conducted by party leaders.

Another candidate, John J. Cumings, is in the field for Democratic nomination as Governor, running on an anti-prohibition platform. It is not definitely determined whether he will withdraw now that Colonel Gaston has announced his intentions.

BOOTLEGGERS MUST PAY INCOME TAX

Privy Council Issues Decision on Canadian Appeal

LONDON, July 27 (AP)—Bootleggers must pay dominion income tax, the same as persons engaged in lawful business, according to a decision of the judicial committee of the Privy Council handed down today.

The decision was on the appeal of the Canadian Minister of Finance against the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of Cecil R. Smith of Windsor, Ont. The appeal was allowed and the respondent Cecil R. Smith, was ordered to pay the costs of the appeal.

Their Lordships stated that they found no valid reason for holding that the Dominion Parliament intended to exclude such dealers from the operation of the income tax. They stated that this was particularly the case as such exclusion would result in increasing the burden of taxation in Canada of those engaged in lawful business.

It does not seem natural for persons to defeat taxation through their own wrongdoing, their Lordships added.

In 1925 Cecil R. Smith made a return to the Dominion Income Tax Department stating that his income was $5000. The income tax authorities, however, stated that Smith's income was $52,000, and he was assessed on this basis.

Smith appealed to the Exchequer Court against the assessment and his appeal was dismissed. Thereupon he carried the case to the Supreme Court, which allowed his appeal. The Supreme Court held that if the definition of income was wide enough to include income derived from a liquor business, expressly prohibited in the Province of Ontario, it would also be wide enough to include gains from burglary or highway robbery.

The Finance Minister appealed to the Privy Council against this decision and today won his point.

Carillon Concerts in Cohasset Grow More and More Enjoyable

Increasing Numbers of Summer Tourists, Hearing From Afar of Beauty of the Event, Make It a Point to Visit Town to Hear and to See

In greater numbers than ever, summer tourists, having heard far beyond the horizon of New England of the interesting scene which transpires on Cohasset Common during the summer weeks when the carillon concerts ring from the towers of St. Stephen's Church, played upon the instrument which is the gift to the community of Mrs. Hugh Bancroft as a memorial to her husband, are supplementing the crowds of residents along the South Shore which come each Tuesday evening and Sunday afternoon, to listen to a music which had its origin in the Old World and which has now happily become established in the New.

Perhaps second only in importance to the music which has a character and variety distinctly its own and to be found duplicated only in the neighborhoods of great European and civic centers is the community picture, reproduced in a typical New England setting rich in the association of early American history.

Groups Stand Silent
Two seasons ago, when the concerts were inaugurated, traffic regulations to govern and insure quiet in the region about the Common were established. These regulations, which bid motorists arrive by certain roads and park their cars before the concert begins in order that there may be no unsightly racket that may mar the beauty of the scene, are still observed but there has grown up also a tradition which is obviously the result of community appreciation and respect for the musical bounty made possible by the generosity of Mrs. Bancroft.

The streets roundabout are filled with standing groups. Near-by stone walls have their rows of friends who sit quietly in the gathering twilight and consider in almost total silence the curious and beautiful music which has so rich a heritage of history and which brings to modern contemplation quiet pictures of the circumstances of its origin.

It is possible to hear comment among those who have taken care to inform themselves of its beginnings in the continental Low Countries where, for hundreds of years, the carillon has been the voice of the people, giving expression to their triumphs and aspirations, the cycle of the seasons, and the patriotic feelings.

Belgian Carilloners Plays
This summer Kamel Leferve, visiting carillonneur from Belgium where he is assistant to Jef Denys, carillonneur of St. Rombold's at Malines, is giving the cycle of weekly concerts. He has trained carilloners to take his place in the seasons when he is not here, but his concerts have become famous through the country and west have made space in their itineraries for the express purpose of hearing him play not only the classics, but songs of the older folk music, and more recently considered the folk music of the United States.

There are those, of course, who prefer "Home Sweet Home," and

"Annie Laurie," and "Mighty Lak a Rose," to the music of Bach and the sonorous studies of Cönnan. But every taste is served in the extraordinarily richly patterned program played upon an instrument which is only exceeded in size by the carillon in the Park Avenue Baptist Church in New York City, whose bells possess a richness of tone unexcelled among the large instruments in Europe.

Syracuse Summer School

SYRACUSE, N. Y. (Special Correspondence)—Mrs. Alice Downey Porter, the "pioneer co-ed," who was graduated with three other women from DePaune University in 1879, three years after women had been provided the higher education there, is still in the class-room, enrolled now as a student at Syracuse University Summer School.

Mrs. Porter has never ceased going to school. Since retiring from Baker University, Kansas, Mo., eight years ago she has been active in social service work in the Italian section of Boston, Mass. She has devoted her entire life to service as a college professor, having been dean of women for nearly 20 years, and has studied in numerous colleges.

During the summer she spends her vacation at her home in Italy. Mrs. Ross Baker whose husband is professor of chemistry at Syracuse, and in winter she makes her home with her other daughter, Mrs. Anna Porter Giambarresi, wife of the pastor of the Italian Methodist church in Boston.

CHILDREN TAUGHT TO SEEK POLICE

Berkeley Bureau, Under a Woman, Adopts New Method

BERKELEY, Calif. (Special Correspondence)—A crime prevention bureau under the leadership of a woman, Mrs. Elizabeth G. Anderson, is now teaching children in the Berkeley Police Department "to teach the child to run to the policeman—not away from him."

Each child brought before the bureau is given attention individually and an effort is made to interest him in some constructive work. Work is provided for the young people who are in need of money.

One of the features of the bureau is the "children's room" in which all consultations between the child and the policeman are held in private. There an opportunity is given to the child to explain to the understood. Children who can be helped are held in unofficial probation during which the bureau develops their interest in something educational and constructive.

PROHIBITION GETS SUPPORT OF EASTERN STAR PUBLICATION

L. W. Standish, Massachusetts State Representative, a Mason, Emphasizes Social and Economic Advantages Resulting From Prohibition

Emphasizing the increasing social and economic advantages which are resulting from national prohibition, Lemuel W. Standish, Massachusetts State Representative and editor of the Eastern Star World, declares in an article in the current issue of his magazine that the Eighteenth Amendment, backed by the great body of law-abiding citizens, cannot be shaken by the attacks of the wets.

Pointing out the support which Masonry and the Eastern Star are giving prohibition, Mr. Standish unequivocally places the power of his magazine back of the dry law.

"Prohibition is here to stay, and behind it is the great mass of the people who stand for the home, for the church, for law and order, and for prohibition of wrongful things," Mr. Standish says in these days, "he adds, 'of the attacks on it by the blatant few and the vociferous minority that there is all too prone a tendency to lose sight of the great underground, underlying, potential majority sentiment which not only believes in prohibition but will never stand for or permit its failure or give ground in this all important influence for moral gain and potential uplifting good for mankind and the generations which are to come.'

"The home vote, the church vote, the votes of wives, fathers, mothers, of those who have benefited so much and so greatly by the banishment of the saloon and all that it stood for, these are they who without bluster, without boasting, the blowing of trumpets or the beating of drums can be relied upon to stand firm for the upholding and demanding the ultimate good and the preservation of the great gains that have come to all of us by reason of the rooting out of the monstrous evils of the saloon and evil influences to which it was always allied.

"One of the favorite arguments of the opposition is that prohibition was put over unexpectedly as a war measure. What nonsense is this? The growth and culmination of prohibition was not the result of a spasmodic or suddenly conceived impetus. Rather was it the growth and the culmination of a campaign, begun, continued and promoted years and years ago, in the education of the young, the dissemination of truth, the insistent work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Good Templars and kindred orders.

"The law has never been given honest and rightful enforcement. In spite of that we claim and any intelligent, unprejudiced citizen can see the large gains, morally, physically and permanently which prohibition has brought in its wake. Piracy, corruption and selfish cupidity will not prevail in the long run in overturning the great majority's decent sentiments. Our sons and our daughters have forgotten what the saloon looked like. Decency, respectability has its chance, and I am enough of a believer in the rightness of public opinion to reckon that the great mass is right in its determination that the wheels of progress will never turn backward.

"All over this land, the home influence, the Christian sentiment, the decent, God-fearing and right-thinking overwhelming majority are not advertising loudly or proclaiming their might, but if and when the time comes for them to rise up and express themselves again, they will do it and the minority of those who are so blatant in their wickedness and their contempt for established law and order will realize their great mistake and once more be proven in the wrong as they were when they predicted that prohibition never could come. It is here, it is here to stay and behind it is the great mass of the people who stand for the home, for the church, for law and order and for prohibition of wrongful things."

VERMONT WORKS TO AID FORESTS

Biennial Report of Forester Outlines Activities and Explains Results

MONTPELIER, Vt., July 27 (Special).—Robert M. Bovey, state forester, in preparing his biennial report of the activities of his department, has made a summary of the work that is carried on along forestry lines in Vermont.

It includes fire prevention, reforestation, maintenance of state forests and municipal forests, farm forestry, a campaign against the white pine blister rust, forestry education and a marketing service. The chief forester tabulates the activities in the following way:

A forest fire prevention system of wardens, lookouts and patrols is maintained by the State. Since the establishment of the Forest Service in 1909 the average annual acreage burned over is 3756 acres as compared with 15,000 acres in the year 1908.

Two forest tree nurseries are run by the State. The trees are sold to planters at cost. There are 8,000,000 transplants available for planting the spring of 1927. To date there has been approximately 13,000,000 trees planted in Vermont.

There are 15 state forests with an aggregate area of 50,000 acres. The lands have been acquired by gift and purchase, and on these forests there has been planted 2,250,000 trees.

The 33 town, village and city forests of Vermont have a combined area of approximately 6600 acres. On these lands 1,275,000 trees have been planted.

Under the direction of the Vermont Agricultural Extension Service there is employed an extension forester. During the past year there were held in all the counties of the State demonstrations in forest planning, thinning and the management of the woodlot.

The white pine blister rust is controlled by the eradication of currant and gooseberry bushes. To date, 102,000 acres have been rid of 1,100,000 bushes. This work is carried on in co-operation with the United States Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Plant Industry.

General forestry information is brought to the attention of the public by means of lectures, exhibits and publications. During the last two years 90 lectures were given, with a total attendance of approximately 9800.

The Forest Service aids timberland owners to market their forest products through the medium of publications and personal service.

HISTORIC DEERFIELD HOMES TO BE OPENED

Public Will See Famous Interiors for First Time

DEERFIELD, July 27 (Special).—Historic homes in old Deerfield will be opened to the public for the first time in the town's history of 250 years on Aug. 10. Many visitors to the town have wished to see the interiors of the many old houses that line the village street, but except in the few where arts and crafts have been sold, they have never before been opened to any but personal friends.

For the benefit of a local cause, however, it has been arranged to open them next month and in many cases the hostesses will wear costumes of their ancestors which have been handed down for generations.

Among the homes to be opened are the Frary house with its historic ballroom, collection of pewter and historic furniture; the home of Mrs. George Sheldon; the Maase, once the home of Parson Willard, and famous for its paneling and hard-ware; the Allen house, the Barnard house, the latter the home of Edith Barnard Delano, which still contains some of its original furnishings; the Billings house, built in 1740 by Dr. Thomas Williams, brother of the founder of Williams College, and many other historic dwellings.

HOME GIVEN TO VETERANS
WEBSTER, Mass., July 27 (AP).—Webster veterans' organizations are rejoicing because of the action of a special town meeting at which it was voted to turn over to their use a $30,000 residence to be used as a future home. The house will be moved 300 feet to another lot, taken by the town. The town also voted to give the veterans a fund of $2500 for moving and remodeling the house.

POLITE WARNING
GIVEN TOURISTS
President Makes It Understood Americans Abroad Should Be Courteous

PAUL SMITHS, N. Y., July 27 (AP).—President Coolidge hopes that Americans abroad will make allowances for conditions in the foreign countries they are visiting and will not indulge in any unwarranted criticisms or any recriminations.

The position of the President was made clear in the matter at the executive offices without, however, any direct reference being made to the demonstrations that are reported to have occurred against American tourists in France.

Doubt was expressed in behalf of the President whether too much attention need be paid to the situation that has been reflected in recent press reports from Europe. The desire of the United States it was said, was to maintain friendly relations with all countries and the belief was expressed that the attitude of irreconcilable persons of the United States or foreign countries should not be treated too seriously.

It is necessary, it was added, for Americans abroad to realize at this time that peoples of some other countries are in a difficult situation and it should be the part of Americans to view their difficulties with sympathy.

Business conditions of the country are more than meeting expectations, in the opinion of Mr. Coolidge.

It had been thought, it was said, that there might be something of a slowing down in industry this year, but this has not materialized.

The prosperity, in the belief of the President, is due in part to the reduction in taxation, which has released money for private enterprise. The general state of business affairs was reported to the President by his Cabinet members before he left Washington.

State Police Drilling Daily for Show at Sesquicentennial

Picked Patrol Working Hard to Perfect Fancy and Rough Riding in Preparation for Philadelphia Trip as Reward of Merit

A picked squad of 30 state troopers, skilled in formation, pyramid and cross stirrup riding, is undergoing final hours of daily, intensive training at the Commonwealth Armory under the direction of Capt. Charles T. Beaupre of the Massachusetts

State Police, preparatory to leaving Boston this week for Philadelphia, where, on Aug. 4, 5, 6 and 7 it will appear at the Sesquicentennial Exposition together with other specially selected drilling units from the state constabularies of New York, Pennsylvania and others of the 24 states in the Union which have state police or constabulary forces.

The exhibition will be part of a police congress, during each day of which officers will meet in conference and the units will have opportunity to exchange ideas of training and maintenance. The Canadian Northwest Mounted Police will send a unit also to appear variously in a more story-book red breeches and blue tunics and the plainer "O. D." of field service uniforms.

Reward for Services
Underlying the selection of the Massachusetts squad there are incidents of individual service for which the trip to Philadelphia is in a way a reward of merit.

Massachusetts, according to Captain Beaupre, can give its state troopers no such rigorous experience in the use of horses on the regular round of year in, year out, duty as New York and Pennsylvania, where many of the long patrol areas are regularly covered by mounted men. Captain Beaupre is not looking to accept any handicap for his men when he accompanies them to Philadelphia. They know their horses; they know their own state troopers; they know, too, the intricacies of the type of riding commonly referred to as Cossack riding, and the cross-stirrup tricks and the varieties of the drag, and when they take the field Massachusetts will have cause to be proud.

The cost of drilling has been defrayed by the Commonwealth. The men have sacrificed days off for too, in the guise of time. Many of them have sacrificed days off for several weeks back in order to master the last details. The cost of transporting them to Philadelphia, by a Merchants' & Miners' Line boat and the expense of their maintenance and that of their mounts will be borne by the Sesquicentennial officials.

Security Brings Assurance
Assurance that the Massachusetts unit will make a good showing in the great exhibition held in Philadelphia by standing on the curbstones of Gay Street, beside the armory, to watch the troopers patiently perfect judgments of balance and difficult formations, arguing their horses to confidence in unwonted circumstances.

Captain Beaupre stands leisurely on the curbstones, too, with a whimsical eye for the small boys attracted thither by the sound of clattering hoofs and the sight of troopers four and five high, standing on their horses' backs. Captain Beaupre's drilling is made up of an occasional sentence, low-spoken, a combination of shrewd analysis of positions and a certain humorous encouragement. Gives Reassuring Word

"Get him going, there, before you get up," is sufficient to make a bronzed youth cease wondering, in obvious anxiety, if he is going to make a half-way secure contact between his stout boots and the gleaming, steel back of his horse and, bolstered by the calm tone and the manifest rightness of the advice, makes it all the way secure.

In a formation that has struck a problematical balance with a grinning trooper triumphantly maintaining a foothold at the apex of the pyramid and holding his cap just so for a photograph, the trooper can have no reason for accepting with anything but good humor the whimsical "Tuck it in there, Raggs-to-Riches," of the captain, who has perceived a loosened detail of uniform.

Sergeant John Reardon and Sergeant James E. Hughes, both seasoned men in the special assignments of duty as well as the humdrum of the state trooper's experience, have directed the intermediate periods of drilling. They will be in actual command at Philadelphia, although Captain Beaupre will be present.

"They've done the ground work, they ought to lead the band," says Captain Beaupre.

STEAMER LEVIATHAN
QUITS BOSTON DRYDOCK

Completing its semi-annual overhauling, the United States Lines steamer Leviathan left the South Boston drydock at noon today for New York City. The Leviathan was in the drydock six days, during which time the under-water section was scraped and painted, the tail shafts were drawn for inspection, and the propellers also received some attention, being replaced where needed. Charles W. Frye, Boston pilot, was on the bridge of the Leviathan when it left the drydock to guide the vessel out of the harbor to Boston Lightship.

The vessel is scheduled to sail at 8 a. m. on Aug. 1 for Southampton and Cherbourg. While at this port the Leviathan was not open to general public inspection because of the limited amount of time before returning to New York for a scheduled sailing.

VERMONT ROAD PLANS OFFERED

Committee Suggests New Tax on Gasoline to Help Financing Program

MONTPELIER, Vt., July 27 (Special).—The subcommittee on a program for state highway construction, to be presented to the next Legislature, has presented its report to the full committee appointed at the highway mass meeting here last spring under the auspices of the Vermont Co-operative Council.

The report has been accepted and the subcommittee has been given a vote of thanks for its investigations.

There are three plans submitted for financing a highway building program on a larger scale than has ever been attempted before in the State, but which the residents seem to be pretty thoroughly united in demanding, the chief problem being to find a way of financing that will not be burdensome. As to the number of miles to be built, and where hard surfacing is most needed, the committee had not yet taken definite action, since the federal traffic survey is not yet completed. This survey will give definite data on which to work.

The program suggested by this committee calls for a building program to the extent of $2,000,000 a year, which is believed to be all the highway department can take care of in any one year. The proposal includes the same amounts that are now spent annually for ordinary maintenance, state aid to towns and the town roads, or so-called back roads. All three plans include the use, for permanent road construction, of the federal aid money the State now receives, $265,000, and the $600,000 that is now available from the general appropriation made by the Legislature.

Plan No. 1 calls for an additional tax of two cents a gallon on gasoline, estimated to raise $500,000, and with the other items mentioned making a total of $1,515,000. This leaves $485,000 to be raised by short-term loans. Plan No. 2 differs from Plan No. 1 only in proposing a one-cent increase in the gas tax and in addition a direct state tax of 10 cents, these sources being expected to yield revenues of $275,000 and $280,000 respectively, leaving $485,000 to be borrowed if the $2,000,000 are to be spent for permanent construction.

Plan No. 3 calls for no borrowing, but provides for a two-cent increase in the gasoline tax, a 10-cent direct tax and an increase in automobile registration fees from 55 cents to $1 a hundredweight on passenger cars and of 20 per cent in the fees for trucks and motorbuses. This would bring a total revenue, including the other sources mentioned, of $2,070,000.

REVERE'S COLLECTOR
AFTER DELINQUENTS

Ernest Acker, collector of taxes for the city of Revere, said today that he is starting a campaign to collect the remainder of the delinquent poll and personal property taxes for the year 1923, amounting to $1000 on account the company holding his bond has declined to renew. That action was taken when Henry F. Long, commissioner of corporations and taxation of Massachusetts, declared his intention to hold collectors or their bondsmen responsible for uncollected delinquent taxes.

John A. DiPesa, city solicitor of Revere, is in court today relating for the city the attempt of certain Revere Beach entertainment concerns to obtain a tax abatement on the levy made this year by the assessors.

BOSTON TO SEE BIG DIRIGIBLE

Los Angeles Will Fly Over City to Make Tests for Radio Compass

The United States naval airship Los Angeles will fly over Boston and the New England coast next week in a series of flights which are expected to require about three days and which will give New England its first view of the big dirigible since the ship passed over Boston in early morning on its epochal journey from Germany in 1924. The purpose of the flights in the Boston district will be to check the calibration of Government radio compass stations at Fourth Cliff (near Scituate), Deer Island, and Thompson's Island.

Data to be obtained in the calibration of these and other stations along the Atlantic coast will indicate to a great degree whether such stations can be used effectively to guide the movements of aircraft on inland flights as well as those of vessels in coastal waters, it is said. The plan of the tests contemplates that the Los Angeles shall circle each station from a point eight or ten miles inland, whereas all previous calibrations have been made from ships at sea.

The airship made observations yesterday in connection with radio compass stations at Monaquan and Sandy Hook, according to news from Lakehurst, N. J., where its hangar is located.

The exact date of the ship's start for New England will depend on weather conditions and the completion of work in other stations of New York naval district. It is expected that the first day aloft in the first district will be devoted to stations from Newport around Cape Cod, the second day to the Boston stations, and on the third day the ship will work as far north as Bar Harbor, Me.

The U. S. S. Patoka, mother ship of the Los Angeles, equipped with a mooring mast to which the dirigible has tied up on former trips away from her base, arrived at Newport yesterday in preparation for the New England trip of the airship. It is supposed the Los Angeles will be moored to the Patoka each night. Lieut.-Commander Charles E. Rosenbuhl will be in charge of the Los Angeles.

The process of calibration, in which the aircraft and its officers will be engaged, consist of verifying the measurements made by the radio stations as to degrees of direction. By the compass observations between two stations and a ship, forming a triangle, the navigators calculate the position of the ship, or rather its distance from each of the stations. For this triangulation process, the instruments of the stations must be kept extremely accurate, and it is this accuracy which the aerial observers will check up.

DRUNKEN DRIVERS TO GO
TO JAIL IN NEWPORT, R. I.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., July 27.—Determined to aid further in ridding the Rhode Island highways of drunken drivers, Judge Max Levy yesterday declared that hereafter when motorists are brought before him in the First District Court, Newport, on charges of operating automobiles while intoxicated, they will receive 10-day jail terms in addition to a regular fine. Such cases have heretofore been disposed of with the offending motorist being fined on first court appearance but being jailed on second and third offenses.

Judge Levy expressed the view that the imposing of jail terms on the first offense will serve as an effective means to check offenders who drink and drive.

POWER TO FORM ELECTION ISSUE OF LABOR GROUP

Electrical Workers Oppose
Candidates Pledged to Private Exploitation

KATONAH, N. Y., July 27 (Special).—A fresh move in the contest between the two rival plans gaining support in the United States for developing the potential fuel and water resources of the country was foreshadowed at the Institute of Giant Power, now in its second and closing week at Brookwood Labor College here.

James P. Noonan, president of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, which is sponsoring the institute, said the electrical workers were determined to fight the "superpower" interests, particularly at the congressional elections in fall. They would oppose all candidates pledged to the private exploitation of large power sites, he said.

The two rival plans for power development were described by speakers at the institute as "superpower" and "giant power." The "superpower" plan, it was explained, sought to develop electric power on a big scale for commercial purposes, by private enterprise as opposed to government operation.

Aid to Agriculture
The "giant power" plan was outlined at the institute by Morris L. Cooke, chairman of the Pennsylvania Power Commission, which favors it, as having three distinctive features in contrast to the "superpower" plan, namely, state or federal regulation, utilization of coal fuel at the mines, and insurance of electric service for farmers and other residential consumers.

C. M. Ripley, publicity representative of the General Electric Company, a proponent of the "superpower" plan, but who has not advocated or defended the "superpower" development plans there, his single lecture being an illustrated one describing some existing power projects, supplemented by some comic motion picture films. A general 3-cent rate for domestic consumption of electricity would be possible through the development of giant power," Mr. Cooke told the institute. This would be accomplished, he said, by turning over to the consumer the advantages realized by capital station production and the interlinking of plants to distribute peak loads, instead of allowing them to be absorbed in the profits by financial juggling in the merging of companies.

Customer Ownership "Misleading"
The slogan of the private power interests, "Consumer ownership is public ownership," is misleading, Mr. Cooke said, because the stock customarily sold to consumers by electric utilities companies was non-voting stock, and also frequently preferred stock, on which the holders received a specified interest on their original investment, so that they did not even benefit by the increasing profits of the companies. The voting stock, on the other hand, he maintained, was coming more and more into the hands of a few individuals or corporations.

A survey by the Pennsylvania Power Commission, he continued, showed the possibility of electricity for farm use and indicated that of the 200,000 farms in Pennsylvania half could be furnished with electricity at an expenditure of $40,000,000 for transmission and distribution lines. This cost, distributed over a period of 10 years, would be about 3 per cent of what the Pennsylvania companies are now spending for capital expenditure, and would, in his opinion, permit a rate of 7 cents per kilowatt hour for farm electricity as against the 17 cents estimated by some authorities, he said.

EXPORT SHOE TRADE SHOWS LARGE GAIN

Figures Disclose Increasing
Demand for Footwear

Special from Monitor Bureau
WASHINGTON, July 26.—The United States during the fiscal year of 1926, exported 327,541 pairs of men's and boys' leather shoes and shoes to Mexico, as compared with 275,000 pairs in 1925, and 309,404 pairs in 1925 according to E. Parsons, shoe and leather manufacturers' division of the Department of Commerce. Of the year's shipments Panama received 122,458 pairs valued at $380,181, a considerable increase over the 98,218 pairs purchased in 1925 and 124,272 supplied by the United States in 1925; Canada increased her demand for this class of goods from 61,890 pairs in 1925 to 113,490 pairs in 1926. South America, Jamaica and the United Kingdom, received respectively 36,077, 8,818 and 64,821 pairs of men's and boys' leather shoes in 1926, as compared with 59,107, 53,457 and 28,276 pairs purchased in the fiscal year of 1925. These increases, however, were insufficient to offset the diminished export trade with Cuba. In the fiscal year of 1926, Cuba was supplied by the United States with 1,238,170 pairs of men's and boys' leather shoes valued at $3,531,534 and in 1925 with 1,457,011 pairs, valued at $4,758,536.

ROCK OF AORNOS IN INDIA FOUND

Discovery Recalls One of
Alexander the Great's
Most Famous Feats

BOMBAY (Special Correspondence).—Sir Aurel Stein has just made a successful tour of archaeological and geographical exploration in the trans-frontier territories between the Indus Kohistan, and the northernmost point of India—the tracts which till recently remained untrodden by any European traveler, having so long proved inaccessible. The tour illustrates the change brought about in a once turbulent region by the rise to power of a strong and capable ruler in the person of Muzaffar Shah, ruler in the person of Muzaffar Shah, ruler in the person of Muzaffar Shah.

But of still greater antiquarian interest was the discovery of ancient fortifications, on the rocky heights, of great natural strength, above the main valley. Sir Aurel Stein believes that the long-sought site of the famous "Rock of Aornos" on Mount Mahabhar, has been found at last, a rock fortress which in classical accounts of Alexander's Indian campaign figures as the scene of one of his most famous exploits.

From Torwali Sir Aurel Stein's party made their way through passes still covered with heavy snow into the mountain tracts of Ghorband, Kama and Ghaknar, lying between the Indus and the range of the Swat watershed. From the heights climbed magnificent views were obtained of the snowy mountain ranges which inclose the hitherto unexplored and inaccessible region of the Indus Kohistan.

Sir Aurel Stein's discovery of the real site of the Rock of Aornos will settle a question which has long vexed scholars. One of Alexander the Great's most spectacular feats was the capture of the Rock of Aornos, a stronghold which was reputed to have resisted the attack of Hercules, and as the rock possessed very striking physical characteristics, it has always been thought possible that some day it would be definitely identified.

Alexander probably crossed the Hindu Kush in the spring of the year 327 and garrisoned at Kabul. With a picked force he attacked the tribes living on the southern slopes of the main range, in accordance with his usual custom of protecting his lines of communication by overpowering and overrunning the local tribesmen. It was during the mopping-up process that the Rock of Aornos was captured, as well as several other fortified towns.

REFUGEE WORK BEARING FRUIT

Settlement Commission in Greece Reports on Activities

ATHENS (Special Correspondence).—The Refugee Settlement Commission, under the direction of Sir Robert Graves, one-time British Consul-General to Erzerum, Turkey, has just issued its quarterly report on the labor thus far achieved for the settlement of refugees.

The commission has worked well with very inadequate funds, and those who have contributed toward these funds will be rejoiced to see how in a short time the country is producing new buildings, hamlets, villages and towns, all reflecting prosperous business and industry.

The commission has worked well with very inadequate funds, and those who have contributed toward these funds will be rejoiced to see how in a short time the country is producing new buildings, hamlets, villages and towns, all reflecting prosperous business and industry. Athens and Piræus, to mention only these two, are enjoying in their neighborhood the collaboration of five new towns showing a population of from 16,000 to 20,000 each. This and other beneficial results have been obtained chiefly at the expense of hard and devoted labor by men to whom the care of thousands was entrusted by the League of Nations and the Greek Government.

Points to be noted about this system are that 95 per cent of the work can be accomplished by unskilled labor; it can be carried out with remarkable rapidity, and costs are very low. The total cost, exclusive of the site, would work out at 2,295, if the houses were built in reasonable quantities. It so happened that worse building weather could not have been chosen. It rained heavily on two days and there were showers at intervals on the other days. The whole work of concrete, walls, floors, and roofs, and the latter being left open for a roof garden.

There are 1 bedroom, 2 living rooms, kitchen, bath-room and coal cellar. The type of steel shuttering employed lends itself to any form of architecture, and the plates, which are bolted together, are about 18 inches by 12 inches.

It does not follow, of course, that every house of this type can be built at this speed, but it conclusively proves what can be done by men working with their hearts in the job and utilizing a clever system of construction with labor-saving machinery. This last was exemplified in the combined concrete mixer and pourer which delivered its charge through a pipe to any point desired.

4½ DAYS TO BUILD HOUSE IN ENGLAND

New Method of Concrete Construction Tested

Special from Monitor Bureau
LONDON.—Presumably as long as the shortage of housing remains acute, so will new methods of house-building be promoted. One of the latest of these to be tested here is the Gavin-Lambly method of poured concrete construction. This system has been tried already in America.

The foundations of the house to be built were laid by the concrete pourer and were ready on a Wednesday morning. Thirty-five men working in three shifts night and day were employed. Steel shuttering was used, and the concrete was poured in 12 inches. The foundations of the house to be built were laid by the concrete pourer and were ready on a Wednesday morning. Thirty-five men working in three shifts night and day were employed. Steel shuttering was used, and the concrete was poured in 12 inches.

Since its inception the commission has valiantly fought a hard fight and has succeeded, despite overwhelming odds, to gain the day. The funds which were placed at its disposal by the League of Nations have not been sufficient to add new settlements to those already established up to the end of the past year. During the last three months the commission has confined its work to reinforcing the already existing colonies for which purpose $242,178 has been spent. Owing to the successful yield of crops last year many of the refugees have been able to partly repay the credits granted to them by the commission.

It is estimated that there are 1,400,000 refugees in Greece, of whom 622,265 are in one way or another settled by the commission, 550,621 being agriculturists and 72,230 urban. It appears from these figures that half of the refugees have not received any aid from the commission.

mission is confronted with a scarcity of land in order to furnish each family with a sufficient amount for habitation and cultivation purposes. The distribution of land has become very profitable and many colonies have received sufficient to meet their needs. The average lot given to each family, for all Greece, does not exceed 2½ hectares, in which is included both cultivable and uncultivable lands, so that the quantity of cultivable lands is reduced to a minimum. Breeding as an industry is greatly prejudiced on account of the lack of pasturage, and land which was once used as pasture is now appropriated for agricultural purposes.

Settlements on Frontiers
The commission has given special attention to the settlements found on the northern frontiers of Macedonia and Thrace. In 1924 the Greek Government had dispatched a large number of refugees to Tchamchia, in the occidental Rumania, to replace the 30,000 Muslims who were considered as exchangeable, but latterly it was found out that they were of Albanian origin and therefore not subject to exchange. Some 500 refugee families who were provisionally stabilised on lands in houses pertaining to these Mohammedans, are now about to be removed to Acarnania in Thessaly. The report affirms that the Greek Government has faithfully lived up to its promises contained in the convention concluded with the League of Nations, one of which is the turning over to the commission a great quantity of crown land for distribution to the refugees.

Cows, Pigs and Chickens Thriving Where Big Herds of Cattle Grazed

Ranches of Western Texas Are Giving Way to Small Farms, With Cotton and Wheat Fields, and Barnyards

Amarillo, Tex.
Special Correspondence

THE great ranches of the Panhandle are rapidly disappearing. Cowboys are becoming farm hands, or oil drillers. And as each big ranch submits to the surveyor's transit and scores of new farms spring into existence, the covered wagons turn their course in that direction.

One of these covered wagons passed through Amarillo not so long ago. It was not the big prairie schooner of old, but it was a canvas-covered farm wagon just the same. On the seat was a bearded man, with his wife and child. Two horses drew the vehicle. Household goods of all sorts were piled in the bed of the wagon. Two more horses trailed behind, and a dog leaped after them. The outfit seemed strangely out of place in this city, where big buildings form the skyline, and where motorcar traffic is thick on the main streets.

A Modern Pioneer
Explained to a question as to where he was from: "And there are hundreds more like me who are on their way to the Panhandle."

"Where are you going?"
"To the South Plains. Looking for a little truck farm. Understand some of those ranch farms are selling mighty cheap—Giddap!"
This Oklahoma was only one of thousands who are obeying the beckoning hand of prosperity in the promised land of the Panhandle. The drivers of covered wagons usually avoid the big towns in their migration, but those less backward, whose "covered wagons" are motor driven, daily pass through Amarillo, the Panhandle metropolis, or Lubbock, some 115 miles south on the South Plains.

From the Middle West
East Texas and Oklahoma have furnished the greatest number of immigrants in the last few years, but the corn and wheat belts of the middle West—Illinois, Iowa and Kansas—have sent and are sending their quota. And more and more of these middle Westerners are being attracted to the fertile plains of west Texas, as the word goes out telling of the new agricultural empire "discovered" in the Nation's largest State.

E. F. Bennett, organization manager of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce, with headquarters in Amarillo, has announced an extensive publicity campaign to attract farmers of the type that will develop this great region to the best advantage. One feature of this campaign will be the sending of a complete agricultural exhibit to the Philadelphia Sesqui-centennial Exposition this summer. A special train will be chartered, and many middle western and eastern communities will be visited on the trip.

"There are millions of people in the United States searching for permanent homes," Mr. Bennett said. "West Texas will get her share of these, just as Canada a few years ago attracted hundreds of thousands of American farmers to the big Canadian wheat country. That west Texas is one of the most versatile and fertile farming sections in the United States has not generally been known. The climate is ideal for agriculture. West Texas is the only extensive section in the world where cotton, wheat, grain sorghums, fruit, poultry and dairy cattle can be raised successfully on the same farm."

Fertile Farm Land

Farm diversification is the doctrine being preached in the Panhandle today. "The cow, now and then should be made to pay dividends, just as do wheat and cotton," the experts are telling the farmers, and the farmers are following their advice.

There are 20,000,000 acres of fertile farm land in the Panhandle-Plains region. There are from 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 acres of combined grazing and farm land in and adjoining the big Panhandle-Plains region. With the immigrant farmers expected here in the next two or three years, the wheat yield of the Panhandle-Plains may jump from 20,000,000 bushels, where it stands now, to from 75,000,000 to 100,000,000 bushels.

Turning Furrows
The plow is turning furrows in a dozen big ranches which, a few years ago, no one dreamed would ever be more than grazing land. The homes of farmers—nesters, if you please to call them—dot the farms on the famous old Spade ranch near Lubbock. The big Flag ranch near Dimmitt also has been given over to the farmer, and dozens of other lesser tracts are being cut up into agricultural units.

The cry of "oil" has gone out from the Panhandle, and thousands are rushing in to share in the boom. But the covered wagon and the covered automobile continue to wend their way across the plains, unmindful of the fact that a second Tulsa is springing up in the center of this region. Their occupants are bound for the little farms that await them in the promised land of plenty, where cotton fields flourish beside the billowing acres of wheat, and where barnyard animals are taking the place of the vast herds of cattle that once knew the Panhandle as their home.

RADIO

RULE OF ETHER - WAVES UP TO RADIOCASTERS

Government Ruling Puts Responsibility on Station Owners

WASHINGTON - The failure of Congress to complete radio regulation and the confusing decisions of the courts on the radio law of 1912, has led the department to request from the Attorney-General an opinion on the whole question of departmental authority. The most important feature of the opinion is in respect to the right to assign and authority to enforce or deny the use of particular wavelengths to individual stations. This question is the key to all regulation.

Since 1923 the department has been making such assignments. In doing so it has followed the decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, rendered in that year. That court directly held that the Secretary was, by the law of 1912, under the duty to make such assignments for the purpose of preventing interference. Until April of this year this was the only court ruling on the subject.

The recent decision of the Chicago court, however, cast doubt on this authority, since it adopted a construction of the 1912 Act directly contrary in this respect to the view taken by the court of the District of Columbia.

The Attorney-General now likewise disagrees with the construction of the District Court of Appeals and advises that while under the law each applicant for a license must designate a definite wavelength, outside the band between 600 and 1600 meters, yet he is at liberty to use other wavelengths at his will.

The department will, therefore, in accordance with the opinion, not assign wavelengths, but will merely recite on the face of the license the wavelength selected by the applicant as the normal wavelength of the station. Under the Attorney-General's opinion, no authority exists in the department, or elsewhere, to compel adherence to this wavelength, and the department must issue licenses to each applicant.

The general effect of this opinion is that regulation has broken down and stations are under no effective restriction as to wavelength or power used. The 1912 act under these various constructions has failed to confer authority for the prevention of interference which was its obvious intent.

Persons desiring to construct stations must determine for themselves whether there will be wavelengths for their use without interference from other stations. They must proceed entirely at their own risk.

There have always been the most cordial relations between the radio administration in Canada and in the United States. The department has refrained from assigning to American stations the wavelengths in use in Canada and the Canadian authorities have reciprocated by avoiding the wavelengths assigned to our stations. A continuance of this policy is a necessity if international confusion is to be avoided.

The department most earnestly hopes, whatever may ensue, that the sense of fair play, as well as interest in the protection of the situation as a whole, will prevent any American station from trespassing upon the Canadian assignments.

The orderly conduct of radio communication and the interest of the listener in broadcasting has been possible largely because of voluntary self-regulation by the industry itself, frequently necessitating some individual sacrifice for general good. The department trusts that this attitude will continue in the future as in the past.

The legislation which has been long sought from Congress to perfect the 1912 Act, reached the stage of passage by both Houses, but insufficient time remained in the session in which to compose conflicts between the House and Senate bills. The legislation will undoubtedly be perfected early in the session which meets in December.

Both bills carry explicit authority to the Government to assign wavelengths, limit power and time, and they both establish in the Government the fundamental property in the air channels. These authorities will undoubtedly be confirmed. While any confusion which may arise pending the next session will certainly be eliminated by the passage of legislation, it will be minimized to the extent that radio casters avoid interference with other stations.

Lifeboats Now Have Radio

Radio-equipped lifeboats are now part of the equipment of all the larger ocean liners, the accompanying photograph showing some of the radio crew working on the storage batteries or accumulators of the Berengaria. These boats are motor equipped, and can tow a whole line of ordinary lifeboats, keeping in constant communication with rescue ships. Another step forward in safe sea travel is thus accorded to radio.

SHOE PLANTS READY FOR FALL BUSINESS

Salesmen on the Road Report That Prospects Are Good

HAVERHILL, Mass., July 27 (Special) - Local shoe plants are rapidly getting under way on fall business. Increasing demands for help indicate that the new business will be under full headway by the middle of August. Buying has been earlier than for several seasons, and the larger unit production is already active. Many concerns that have been engaged in taking inventory and in realigning their organizations have completed these details and are ready to resume active production.

Several classes of skilled shoe help are already in great demand, particularly stitching room operatives. French cord stitchers, top stitchers, vampers, and French cord turners are reported in shortage. Some factories are also in demand for salesmen from the local plants are in their territories and in reports to the factories say conditions are favorable for a good fall and winter business.

DORCHESTER OUTING HAS BUSY PROGRAM

Approximately 300 members and guests of the Dorchester Board of Trade are expected to attend the fourteenth annual outing of the organization which will be held at Pemberton Inn, Nantasket, tomorrow afternoon and evening. A program of sports, which will have as a feature a baseball game between two of the outstanding teams of the district, will occupy the afternoon. Dinner will be served in the Inn at 5:30 o'clock.

John A. McMahon, superintendent of the Dorchester Center Post Office, is chairman of the outing committee. Other members of the committee include: Gordon K. Russell, William T. Doyle, R. P. Delaney, Paul Cliffo, Edward W. O'Hearn, R. F. Tracey, N. W. Robinson, president of the organization; W. M. Robinson, treasurer; John J. Daily, secretary, and a ticket committee of 50 men.

Danish Amateur Regulations Issued

Hartford, Conn., July 27

NEW radio regulations making adequate provision for the operation of privately owned amateur stations have just been put into effect in Denmark, according to a bulletin just issued by the International Amateur Radio Union, with headquarters in this city.

The new regulations, which have been anticipated for many years, place the Danish amateur on an equal footing with his brother amateurs in most of the other countries of the world, and already a number of stations have started operation.

Under the new laws, operation of amateur stations is permitted on 15 meters, from 43.7 to 47 meters, from 75 to 75.5 meters, and from 95 to 115 meters. Powers up to 100 watts are authorized, and licenses will be issued with two-letter call letters preceded by the figure "7," as, for instance, 7EC. The license fee of 20 kroner ($5) has purposely been put at a low figure to encourage amateur short-wave development.

Question Box

Will you please let me know your "reaction" to the idea of building a Hurd circuit of the Browning-Drake set using the American Power Pack for the audio amplifier? I am a radio enthusiast and a former-coupled and I am wondering if I could combine two impedances with one of the American Power Pack. I have also used the second stage audio transformer (which I understand shows better characteristics than the first stage) because I have heard an American radio engineer say that a W. E. cone 440 A. W. and it sounded wonderfully well, but I've heard in this set. I feel it would be able to print a diagram later on, showing how this could be done.

I have been told that neutralizing a tuned radio-frequency set, whether by the Hurd method or otherwise, decreases sensitivity and cuts out the side bands of the radio-casting station, thereby affecting the tone of your instrument. Is this so? I feel it would be able to print a diagram later on, showing how this could be done.

The last question a radio engineer has reported that in order to increase sensitivity and cut out the side bands of the radio-casting station, thereby affecting the tone of your instrument. Is this so? I feel it would be able to print a diagram later on, showing how this could be done.

Will you please be good enough to let me have the address of the concern in New York City which is making the photographic diagrams of the Hurd circuit. I know you have published it several times, but I am unable to find it. I would you state if any refinements or improvements will be made in the fall of this circuit. I am a radio enthusiast and a former-coupled and I am wondering if I could combine two impedances with one of the American Power Pack. I have also used the second stage audio transformer (which I understand shows better characteristics than the first stage) because I have heard an American radio engineer say that a W. E. cone 440 A. Ans. The plan you suggest would work out very nicely. We are going to publish a set this fall showing the Hurd circuit, with the latest ramifications of the same using a power amplifier similar to the American job. The difficulty you speak of with neutralization is one which we hope to get into at length in these columns. In our search for pure tone, we have to go into a range of frequencies and finally the H. E. end of the spectrum. We are going to use a regeneration because of its sensitivity.

activity and the bewailing of the fact that it has been closely held by those controlling the patent, may prove a real blessing, a case of seeking something better than what we have, for its use to any extent does prove detrimental to tone quality. Tuning any circuit beyond a certain state of sharpness cuts off the sidebands you speak of. Neutralization is practically regeneration. A well balanced or neutralized set is just on the verge of oscillation. It tunes sharply and is sensitive but also the tone quality suffers due to the cutting off of side bands. Without neutralization the effect is the same as carrying the tuner on a regenerative detector too far and the result is an oscillating receiver which is worse than useless. The writer believes that the answer to this question will be a combination of tuned and untuned radio frequency amplification or multiple stages of rather broadly tuned R. F. With from four to six stages, each one will give some amplification which will be very large over all, the tuning will be normal and selective enough for ordinary purposes and the circuits of such a nature will have no tendency to oscillate and will operate well off of the spilling point giving a pure modulation input into the detector resulting in clear reproduction of the music. The writer above answers the question on a switching device for this will then be unnecessary. A series resistance in the Hurd circuit will hold the tube down from oscillating and broaden the tuning of the circuit. The writer is a radio enthusiast and a former-coupled and I am wondering if I could combine two impedances with one of the American Power Pack. I have also used the second stage audio transformer (which I understand shows better characteristics than the first stage) because I have heard an American radio engineer say that a W. E. cone 440 A. W. and it sounded wonderfully well, but I've heard in this set. I feel it would be able to print a diagram later on, showing how this could be done.

AUSTRO-GERMAN UNION ADVOCATED

Plea Made for Preliminary People's Referendum

By Wireless

BERLIN, July 26 - Another manifestation in favor of an Austro-German union took place here, yesterday, in connection with the visit of Austria's leading club to Berlin.

The separation of Austria and Germany, Paul Loeb, president of the Reichstag, declared, was the work of former kings. The people of both countries, however, desired an "undivided German nation."

"We want to live peacefully among the other nations of the world," he said, "but we also want the right of self-determination. Why are we not permitted to hold a preliminary people's referendum? It would show that both nations want to unite."

He concluded his speech with cheers for a "greater German Republic."

STREET PLAY AREAS URGED

Protection of children at play in the streets in the tenement districts, sections of Boston by roping off certain areas and thus excluding automobile traffic was proposed to Mayor Nichols by letter yesterday by William C. Froust, candidate for the Democratic nomination for district attorney of Suffolk County.

Mr. Froust said that the more facilities a city offers children for innocent sports the better citizens they become.

SUNSET STORIES

Fanning the Hive

WHAT a hot day it was! So hot that the candles in the brass candlesticks on the mantelpiece, instead of standing up straight like sentinels on duty, were bent over till they looked like books, and threatened at every moment to start dripping away like icicles in the sunshine.

"Poor things!" said Uncle Ned, coming into the room, as he straightened them out and laid them down on the mantel behind the candlesticks. "Being only wax, they can hardly be expected to stand up with the thermometer at '90 degrees in the shade."

"Neither can I," said Billy, who, with Dolly, his twin sister, was lying on the floor in front of the French window.

"It's too hot even to read!" said Lindsay, lying on the arm of the Morris chair with a half-open book beside her.

"Even Tim is panting," said Helen, putting a languid hand on the back of her little spaniel as they sat side by side on the floor leaning up against the wall.

Uncle Ned looked around the room a moment, and then at the listless children.

"Upon my word!" he said, "if it's as bad as that, I think we'd better begin to fan the hive."

"What do you mean, Uncle Ned?" asked Lindsay curiously. "It only makes me hotter to use a fan."

"I wasn't talking about using a fan," said Uncle Ned, "but about being a fan. Did you ever see inside a beehive?"

"No," said everybody. "Did you, Uncle?" asked Helen.

"Yes," said Uncle Ned. "I saw into one last night in a book I was reading, and it was a busy place. I assure you. Lots to do, and everybody busy doing it."

"Tell us about fanning the hive," said Billy.

"Well," said Uncle Ned, "I understand that in very hot weather, when the hive gets unbearably close, some of the bees form a line from the entrance, and by using their wings vigorously, force fresh air into the hive, while others, in another line, use their wings to force the hot air out of the hive. In this way the hive is kept fresh, and everybody goes about working comfortably. And the little bees who are fans keep themselves as comfortable as they can by fanning the hive."

"By the way," he added suddenly, looking about the rather untidy, dusty room, full of glaring light, "I think this room would be much cooler if we closed in the blinds of the French windows."

"I'll help!" said Billy, dashing out onto the porch.

"I'm going to empty those faded flowers and wash the vase," said Lindsay, with sudden energy.

"And I'll get some fresh pansies and honeysuckle from the side yard where it's shady!" exclaimed Helen, dashing out with Tim.

Garden Furniture

London
Special Correspondence

GARDEN furniture gets, if possible, gayer and more practical every year. One at least of the big stores issues a catalogue devoted entirely to it. It has a delightful specialty in the form of an ordinary mattress stuffed with kapok or vegetable down and covered with brightly hued cretonne usually with an orange-colored ground. The underside is of oilcloth so that when the mattress is placed on the grass after rain the damp will not penetrate. It is delightful for those who love to be seated on a level with the daisies in the lawn but who find the ground too decidedly hard and uncomfortable.

The ubiquitous Chesterfield sofa is replaced in the garden by a couch hammock swinging on a steel frame with an awning above to match the covering. The most popular material for this is a green rot-proof canvas that is none the worse for being left out in the rain. A couch seen at the Chelsea flower show this year was of this canvas in full sail. The sails were orange color, and the galleon was repeated with a motif of a dolphin, also in clear, brilliant colors. Orange is a favorite for garden furnishing and an orange couch hammock makes a brilliant patch amid the surrounding green of the trees. These couches have a mattress cushion in the seat and are exceedingly comfortable.

A chair that has been greatly used in the garden of recent years is a folding one with wide arm rests, a canvas seat and a band of canvas across the back to support the shoulders. A delightful new attachment to this chair is in the form of an adjustable book rest which can also be used as a table for work or a glass of iced lemonade.

Old Teak

Many homes without a summer-house are now provided with a sort of garden cupboard or storehouse in which these things are locked up in winter. Then there is what one might call the permanent garden furniture that remains out of doors all through the year. A great deal of this is now made of a ship's teak wood. One firm started using this nearly 100 years ago and say that they have broken up more than 800 old ships during that time. Some of the wood is being used for buildings in the old Tudor style, but it is also especially well adapted to garden furniture because, as it is thoroughly seasoned, it requires no paint nor varnish, and actually improves in color with exposure to the weather.

All sorts of interesting pieces are made in teak. A semicircular set placed where a good view of the garden can be obtained from it is often seen. This set is also enchanting in a corner of a rock garden. "Motto" seats are very attractive with a verse carved on the back like one seen at the Chelsea Show on which was inscribed:

Thank God for a garden.
Be it ever so small
Thank God for a garden
That comes flooding it all.

One of the new designs for a teak seat of this description has hinged side flaps forming temporary tables that let down when not in use. Another good idea is a box seat in which garden cushions are stored.

Willow Furniture

Although these plain but picturesque teak seats have almost entirely supplanted the green painted ones of former years, some women still prefer the painted variety, but white is used instead of the green. It has the advantage that it can be kept scrupulously clean so that there is no danger of soiling the daintiest frock, and although it is not as durable as the teak it is very fresh looking.

Rustic woven willow furniture has the advantage over wood of being so springy that it is remarkably comfortable. A big grandfather's chair with high sides that protect alike from the sun and wind is as cozy as it is picturesque. A lower tub-shaped chair is much liked by men. And there is a quaint little new-shaped chair with a slot in the back for lifting it by. The tub-shaped chair is charming with a cretonne cover over it, used in a bedroom.

The very latest design in woven willow, introduced this year, is a circular seat to surround a tree trunk. It is delightful to sit with back to a tree trunk beneath the leafy shade, and it is surprising to find the extent to which woven willow yields with pressure, giving all the comfort of a spring. The seat is made in sections which are joined together with little leather straps.

Willow shelters are also very picturesque and are so light that they can easily be moved from one part of the lawn to another; they are wind-proof and weather-proof and are made in sections so that they can be put up quite easily.

Cushions and Aprons

With teak and willow furniture rustic cushions harmonize best, and a well-known ex-soldier's embroidery industry in Ebury Street, London, that produces beautiful needlework, makes charming cushion covers for

Summer Tea Rooms

MANY a woman with a talent for catering and a fondness for country life is making a success of conducting an informal tea room. This line of work is especially well adapted to women whose summer months bring more of leisure than of income. In this portion to the expense and labor, which are items that could be arranged for on a commission basis with some expert village housewife, to mutual advantage.

In looking for a suitable location all sorts of possibilities must be followed up carefully. For instance, a the garden of coarse gunny sacking either in the natural brow or in soft green with posies or baskets of flowers worked in many-colored wools in the center. The Englishwoman is essentially a gardening woman and delights also in the practical garden aprons that the soldiers make of the same material with bands of gay woolen embroidery, generally simple darning stitch, and with a big pocket for garden scissors.

class are teachers, students and various clerical workers connected with schools and colleges who are comparatively free during the warm weather months. Other women, who lead a more or less shut-in life during the winter have found such a summer enterprise pleasurable as well as profitable. These rural restaurants spring up usually along the popular motor highways, and, having once chosen an advantageous location, the proprietors have only to store their belongings at the end of the season and await the arrival of another summer, when they can resume business at the same stand.

For this reason the selection of a desirable location is of the utmost importance as having once established such an enterprise successfully, a change is often detrimental. Tourists soon get the habit of looking for a cozy little eating place at a certain turn in the road and will go miles rather than experiment with a new one. Not to find their anticipated rural restaurant is a distinct disappointment, so a good and continued location is a valuable business asset.

Division of Labor

A woman who is an authority on this subject always advises dividing such an enterprise between two, one woman undertaking the rôle of hostess and cashier, at the same time keeping a watchful eye on the service and aspect of the room; the other taking charge of the "back of the house," as it is professionally called. This includes the buying of supplies, the direction of the kitchen and the supervision of all orders as they are taken to the dining room. In a small establishment it is quite possible to hire help only for general cleaning and rough work, the two women arriving at a proper division of the labor.

Some of the most successful of these rural tea rooms depend for special cakes, pies and homemade candies on the village housewives, who often excel in a type of cooking that it is impossible to get from an ordinary domestic worker. The maker of prize doughnuts and lemon meringue pies may be glad to supply these items to the newly opened restaurant and the excellence of a few such specialties often spreads quickly and brings welcome business from tourists and summer visitors. An arrangement of this kind reduces kitchen work, and, at least in the beginning, is often well worth while. From a money-making point of view, it is more advantageous to concentrate on quickly made beverages, sandwiches and salads than to spend time on rich layer cakes and pastry on which the profit is rarely in proportion.

Eggs Baked With Mushrooms

Drain the liquid from a tin of mushrooms or parboil till tender ½ pound of fresh mushrooms and drain the liquid from them. Cook 10 minutes over a very slow fire or in a double-boiler, with 2 tablespoons of butter and seasoning to taste. Pour butter and mushrooms into a shallow baking dish that may be used as a serving dish. Over the mushrooms break 6 eggs, being careful not to break the yolks. Season to taste, sprinkle with fresh bread crumbs, dot with butter, and bake until the eggs are "set."

and are paid only for the actual hours they are needed.

Motorists and other tourists—both men and women—are so appreciative of a well-equipped dressing-room that this important feature should not be overlooked. There should always be available plenty of small, fresh towels, good toilet soap, a generous-sized mirror and hand-glass, clothes-brush and other of the usual toilet articles. There is often an opportunity for the sale of packets of hairpins, hair-nets, pins, inexpensive handkerchiefs, and other small personal belongings which the tourist may be glad to replenish. These details please customers and also bring in extra revenue.

An Old-Fashioned Cake

A cupful of applesauce is plenty to use in the making of a perfectly delicious cake which may be baked in a loaf tin and eaten in conventional slices; or baked in a larger, shallower tin, cut in squares and served hot or cold with cream, plain or whipped.

To make the cake, cream ½ cupful of butter with 1 cupful of granulated sugar. Add 1 egg, well-beaten. Then mix with ½ cupful of flour, ½ teaspoonful each of salt, cloves and cinnamon. Sift once. Stir 1 level teaspoonful of soda into the cupful of applesauce, then alternately add a little of the sauce and a little of the flour to the butter-sugar-egg mixture until all is well blended. Beat thoroughly.

If desired, ½ cupful of chopped raisins or nuts, or a mixture of both, may be stirred into the batter. Pour into a thoroughly oiled tin, and bake in an oven which is not too hot until testing with a straw shows that it is done.

This cake has a particularly attractive glossy brown crust, and never needs to be iced. It is a cake that is sufficiently moist to keep well, but is so delicious that it seldom is allowed to stay long in the cake chest. Requiring but one egg to make, it is an economical dessert.

Delicious Sweetmeats

Persian Halvah

One pound semolina, ½ pound cooking butter, 3 pounds best moist sugar, 2 ounces sweet almonds, blanched and sliced, essence of rose-water.

Wet the semolina with a little water, enough to make it into a stiff dough and knead well, shape it into a ball and let it stand all night. Next day add about 2 pints, or slightly less, of warm water to draw the milk from the semolina, squeezing and mashing the mixture with the hand until the nutriment is extracted. Strain the now thick milky mixture through a muslin or fine wire sieve. Let it stand for 2 hours in a large bowl. Drain off whatever water has then arisen to the surface and mix smoothly. Put the butter into a preserving pan and let it warm through, but not boil, then pour in the milk which ought to be about 1½ pints in quantity, and stir briskly. When the milk becomes sapped and the mixture begins to clear, add the sugar and cook until it becomes transparent, then throw in the blanched and sliced almonds (scour the almonds in advance), and stir with a wooden spoon. Turn out when still slightly warm, and set to cool.

Quick Which Can Be Kept
A quaint establishment on the Maine coast follows a similar plan of afternoon serving, the hours being from 4 to 7 p. m. It is the objective point of walking and motoring parties and is also convenient to a trolley line. An awning-covered platform increases the space available for serving and a specified combination of food is offered at a fixed price. This includes a choice of hot or cold beverages, assorted sandwiches, a variety of delicious cakes and one or two kinds of ice cream, either with or without the addition of a sauce. This arrangement gives sufficient variety and all the food may be kept over for a day without injury, in case of slack business because of bad weather. Young girls from the village act as waitresses.

Counsel for the Woman Traveling Alone

WOMEN guests are now so welcome in hotels all over the world that every effort is made not only to attract but to retain their patronage. A woman traveling alone is able to enjoy to the utmost a stay in one of these inviting hostels. They stand for the latest thing in room and table equipment, as well as in service, luxury and convenience, so that there is always something for the observing woman to learn. All kinds of home-like touches are in evidence since the aim of an up-to-date hotel management is to express hospitality and to offer to its guests a "home away from home" as one of these establishments invitingly phrases it.

Getting Acquainted in Advance

The most practical way to become familiar with the general details of any hotel which a traveler anticipates patronizing is to write for their free descriptive booklets. A comparison of these is of great assistance in choosing a stopping place. One can visualize the building and relative position of entrances, elevators and restaurants, so that a sense of home will greet one on arrival. Without this preliminary study it might, for instance, be a surprise to hear of the "direct" level of the "main floor" and the "first mezzanine," all before the so-called "first floor" was reached, which, in reality, may be two or three stories above the sidewalk. Mezzanines are wonderful space-savers, as they are, what the word indicates, half-floors or galleries. From the first mezzanine one can look down on the lobby or foyer and get a glimpse of bustling hotel life without being associated with it. Here the guest will probably find convenient writing desks, cosy reading nooks with floor lamps, and just the right angle and other delightful furnishings. Many of the newer hotels have this type of mezzanine.

Whenever possible, it is well to reserve hotel accommodations in advance. This establishes one's identity and serves as an introduction to the hotel. When writing for rates and booklet, it is a good idea to ask for a specimen menu of each meal and also information as to "club" or "table d'hôte" meals, should there be any. While most hotels in large cities are now conducted on the European plan and prices quoted are for rooms only, it is just as well to be familiar with the restaurant tariff, even though one is not obligated to patronize it.

Meals and Tips

Many guests dislike to order from the à la carte menu that fairly bristles with foreign culinary terms and on which each dish is listed at a separate price. To offset this, some hotels serve what are known as "club," "table d'hôte" or "prix fixe" meals. These three expressions all mean about the same thing; that is, a certain specified combination of food at a fixed price. These special meals are usually served in the Grill Room, where service is less formal, prices a bit lower and tips therefore correspondingly less. Ten per cent is the recognized basis for tipping, but it is well to deviate on the side of generosity, particularly if the service has been satisfactory. The numerous dining rooms all under the same roof are often puzzling to the inexperienced woman guest, but it is safe to remember that choice of the room in which to eat depends largely upon individual taste. How one wishes to dress, what one wishes to order and how much time one has for the meal are determining factors. If one feels like dressing for dinner, lingering over it and enjoying the music, the main restaurant will be a pleasant choice; otherwise it will be wiser to dine in the Grill or one of the smaller dining rooms. If for any reason one prefers eating in one's room, one has only to ask the telephone operator for "room service" and a waiter will appear with the menu. Meals in the room are an expensive luxury as every item is about 10 cents more than the restaurant price, but to have a daintily set table brought in noiselessly and to see the skill displayed in keeping hot dishes hot, and cold dishes cold, makes it worth while occasionally.

The Business Day

Even the formality of registering at the office is made easy for the woman traveler and some hotels have a loose-leaf register so that a single page may be taken to a guest's room for signature. As hotels usually have a recognized hour as the termination of a business day, one must be careful not to over-stay this time unless one is willing to be charged for another night. It may be 5, 6 or 7 p. m., and when one is not leaving until a later hour, it is well to pay the bill and notify the office that the room is at its disposal. Hand baggage may be checked in the parcel room and called for at departure, so that the formal giving up of a room at a certain hour need not be an inconvenience.

Helping the System

If one has reason to expect letters, telegrams or telephone messages on arrival, ask for them. Even in the best-conducted houses there is sometimes a slip in the service. A guest should do her share toward making things come her way. This is also true if one is expecting telephone messages. The telephone operators should be advised of a guest's whereabouts in the hotel if she wishes to be located quickly. It is always good service, one must put no obstacle in its path.

A Friend on Every Floor

In many hotels the presence of a woman floor-clerk on every floor or every other floor is a comfort to an inexperienced woman traveler. This clerk has her desk in a convenient place, usually near the main elevator, and is chosen for this work because of her intelligence and reliability. She is ready to take care of keys, receive and deliver small packages or messages, and to make things easy in every way possible. Such a clerk is well versed in all that pertains to that particular hotel and any seeming perplexities often disappear after a little talk with her.

The Pearl Fisheries of Ceylon Extend Their Romance All Around the World.

¶ The pearl divers bring in their catch in bags. The oysters are counted and made into three piles, one of which is given to the diving crew, the others to the government.

¶ To expedite the process of extracting, the oysters are piled in dugout canoes and covered with matting. At the end of ten days the canoe is flooded and the shells removed, leaving an untidy mass of refuse.

¶ Sometimes important finds are made by individuals who purchase oysters from the divers or from other sources. They group themselves about the beach and search eagerly, always in hope of making a valuable find.

¶ These are the pearl merchants of Pearl Town (Marichchukaddi), then whom there are none more expert in examining and weighing the gems.

¶ The natives often spend hours sifting the dry, powdered oysters seeking pearls that may have gone undiscovered in the first processes of extraction. They too have a keen sense of touch and are quick to detect the good that they find in the dross.

¶ Hour after hour sits the seeker, tailor fashion, examining the partly dried oyster. His knife is keen but his sense of touch more so. The pearls, often small as mustard seeds, yield to his search.

¶ Delicately balanced scales are used to weigh the pearls, the weights being almost infinitesimal. They are also graded and given a value for purity of color and perfection of shape. One of these humble appearing merchants may sometimes carry a fortune in pearls in his pocket.

¶ The pearl workers of Ceylon sit in the streets before small, three-legged tables, and with a primitive bow drill pierce the smallest pearls so that they may be strung into ropes and woven in rich embroideries.

FRESH Strawberry jam

as it was made in

Old English Manor Houses

You recognize Crosse & Blackwell's strawberry jam by the very first spoonful, for every strawberry is complete and perfect, swimming in the rich syrup of its own goodness. Its fragrance is the fragrance of the fresh fruit as it lay in the hot sunshine of old walled gardens, and as you eat, each strawberry surrenders the gentle beauty of its ripeness for your wonder and delight. It is jam just as it is made in the Manor Houses of Old England. Fresh fruit and pure sugar, just that and nothing more, prepared over slow fires, and free from every modern adulteration. That is why the high standard of Crosse & Blackwell's jams is recognized throughout the world.

THE HOME FORUM

From a Summer Aerie

AFTER many summers of delightful labor and recreation in the second-story sanctum of my cottage by the sea, I have only just discovered its true name. Year after year on escaping from the city I have been keenly interested in two large gulls' nests, one of which I can actually see with binoculars from my window, and perennially I have marvelled at these roomy aeries so loftily built into the airy green. I have envied such aerial security amid the winds from off the sea. What sweep of outlook over ocean and land! What eternal elevation! and no need ever to descend to earth! But I envy them no longer, for I have a veritable aerie of my own.

A window toward the south, a window commanding the west and, just outside, that indispensable adjunct of every human dwelling—an encircling veranda high above the ground, from which I may complete the panorama of east and north: These are mine. On the shore side across meadows and marshes my eyes lose themselves in gentle slopes immersed in deepest of woodland greens. Through the south window—the sea, of inscrutable, ever-changing hues. Far out over the restless expanse, where the gulls, after a swoop into the waves after some bit of food they skim in triumph across the marsh to their aerie—while I watch from mine.

When they disappear within their aerie, I turn back to my own. It is not so much larger, but quite sufficient to house my books, a spacious table (always delectably littered with papers and magazines and strictly forbidden to all maids), and my beloved picture gallery of English railway posters. Within, or without, what more can mortal desire? Of course, I explore the fields and the woods and roam the shore by the hour. But they wait upon my pleasure just the same when I return to climb the steep stairs to my aerie and look forth upon all, advantaged by the perspective which only distance can provide.

At night, of course, I must fall back on the endless resources of my own man-made equipment within: there are books—and thoughts—and a bit of writing now and then. But during the long summer days from early sunrise to the last lingering dusk it is difficult to choose between the vastly varied beauty without and the fascination of a world of books within. Between the limits of light I cannot choose which moment is most lovely. And I care not if the morning mist hangs on heavily until high noon; I care not if rain beats upon the shingles above me. Ocean and woods are indescribably mysterious, shrouded in the mist: meadows and trees glow with greener joy amid falling rain. It often seems as if the most wondrous time is that when the sea and every tree and finally the shadowy silhouettes of the sky line with its wavy thread of light dissolves into darkness. But perhaps night is more marvelous, as it softly draws the curtain across the picture which the imagination holds until the sun shall split the veil and flash the whole scene into brilliant again.

This endless pageant, you will say, is quite independent of aeries, winged or human. So it is, but not of my absorption in the wonder of it all. Now that I have found a name for my lookout, my delight in spectacle, so familiar, yet ever changing, is enhanced. Is this not an amazing testimony to the transforming power of a mere word? How poetic is "aerie"! One of those words which preserves the aroma of poetry and never descends to the level of current popular use. Now I see a wholly new and personal significance in Milton's description of the first appearance of birds upon the earth:

scaring the air sublime
With clang despoiled the ground, under a cloud
In prospect. There the eagle and the stork
On cliffs and cedar tops their eyries build,
and set forth
Their airy caravan, high over seas.

I was somewhat disconcerted when probing the history of the word to find that it means the nest of a predatory bird, such as the eagle or the hawk. But the needs of poetry have rescued it from any such narrow use and have extended its scope to include any picturesque height. So Keats employs it in "Endymion,"

where beauty dwell
In gulf or aerie, mountain or deep dell.

So I am reassured. I am not predatory merely because I live in an aerie! Yet my whole existence here is only a succession of forays: I would capture impressions of the world about and below me and make some of their meaning my own. Hence I realize that I must develop the two striking powers of the eagle, that noblest of birds which seeks the high places for his dwelling: I must cultivate keenness of vision and the faculty of sustained flights—of imagination. Who would not soar with eagle's vision from such a height over such a scene?

Many can boast of a far more luxurious aerie and of the command of far more impressive spectacles. It chances that I have myself just returned from a journey across the continent and from awing observation cars gazed in awe at the heights of the Rockies and into the depths of Colorado canyons. In California friends brought me up to their blissful aerie on the mountainside, whence one Teed's eye with endless ecstasy upon the sweep of deep valleys and range on range of magnificent mountain peaks. But perversely enough this grandeur induced satiety. I wished for a more restful aerie where I might order the impressions of this boundless splendor. And now back amid the less aggressive loveliness of my New England shore I can mingle with actual views of gentle slope and rolling hills, images of mighty western peaks and precipitous gorges. This was a program full enough to last for more than one summer.

Because I have not included normal human companionship in this program does not mean that my aerie is an ivory tower where I remain immured in my own reveries. I sail forth regularly to talk and play with my fellow-summerers. There! One of my gulls emerged from his aerie and sent his white sails toward the sea. I will fare forth from mine and gather up the morning news—or maybe a message from my friends in their aerie by the Pacific. P. K.

Raleigh and Pendennis

We shall recall Raleigh at Sherborne Castle; but there is a special reason for visiting the Devon shore near his boyhood home—and the special reason, I think, is that much-loved picture by Sir John Everett Millais, which you will see in the Tate Gallery, London, "The Boyhood of Walter Raleigh." I'd make a very considerable detour to sit on those sands and feel myself there with the little Raleigh boy, before going on to Sherborne and to Adelphi (where his Durham House stood) . . . and the Tate Gallery, where he is a little boy again, dreaming of romance and adventures and riches and favor. . . .

But I'd make another detour from that middle road before I got to Sidford. I'd turn north at the first cross-roads, for Ottery Saint Mary—not just because Coleridge was born there and his father was rector of the beautiful old church which copied some of the notable features of Exeter Cathedral (the transeptal towers, for instance), but also because of a little Charterhouse schoolboy who used to spend his school vacations near there, with his mother and stepfather at their place, Larkbeare, Fairoaks, and who stored up, then, the impressions which he was later to give forth in the opening chapters of "Pendennis," where Ottery Saint Mary figures as Clavering Saint Mary's.

If you are bent upon this pilgrimage, it may be that you are hopeful of finding the occasion to see one of those when Squire Pendennis is giving a dinner graced by the presence of "my brother the Major," down from London, on a biennial visit; or it may be that you are less wishful to meet the aristocracy of the neighborhood than to see Pen and his mother pacing Fairoaks lawn at sunset, their figures casting long blue shadows over the grass, the windows of Clavering House, opposite, flaming "so as to make your eyes wink"; and the towers of the old abbey church rising against the sky in purple splendor, while Pen repeats, "These are Thy glorious works, Parent of Good, and indoors the Squire takes his after-dinner nap, the "Globe" on his knee, and on his face the yellow bandanna handkerchief his brother the Major had sent him from India. "From 'So You're Going to England!' by Clara E. Laughlin.

During the past hundred and fifty years a change in the artistic quality of the silversmith's art took place. Only within the past ten or twenty years have we thought of returning to the beautiful in this applied art. True connoisseurs of silver have always existed; but many have desired the hall-mark rather than fine design and workmanship. Too many have remained insensible to that beauty of arrangement and propriety of design especially becoming to the art and handicraft of the metal worker. A visit to any museum will testify to this. We can see that the sense of aesthetic beauty has been missing for some time.

But there has been an element of comfort in the circumstance that during all this unhappy triumph of machine-made articles there have been continuously working a few men who have resisted the sway of the commercial. Many of them are quite unknown to the general public, for they have been outlived by the shops. The genuinely artistic workers who prefer to devote themselves to what they know to be right and fine are very few, and exist solely on the commissions of a few individuals of the most excellent taste. They are the craftsmen whose names will go down honorably to posterity as the great metal workers of today, though they work in comparative obscurity.

The true artist is he who, educated

as a craftsman, designs and executes the objects himself, undeterred and unmoved by the destroying conditions of the ordinary silversmith's workshop.

These few workmen today do not aim to become Cellinis, but gifted with a dainty imagination, with pure feeling for form and line, and, to harmonize all, with a love of simplicity, they have bent their craftsmanship to the production of beautiful objects. Within the last few years this beautiful craft has been working its way back. Simple flowers—wild ones—are the principal theme on many of these good pieces. Field poetry adapts itself into arrangements elegant and appropriate. Of all forms of silver-working—whether cast, or struck, or chased, or repoussé—none, we think, approaches the last in the test which it applies to the smith. In fact, the modeling tool of the sculptor, like the graver of the chaser, cannot compare in the silversmith's hand with the hammer, the raising tools, and the tracer of the repoussé worker. With these he can work the yielding metal as he will, play with his decoration or his pattern as he chooses, and bring it up to the point of sharpness, or caress it into liquid meltingness as he may desire—until in the completed piece we can see not only the conception of the designer in the shape he imagined it, but we feel that he has impressed upon it some of his own feeling, and revealed in it his own artistic emotion.

Four Gift Men

We were lastly enjoying the quiet half hour after tiffin, our mid-day meal, before beginning the day's work again. The old brass lion on the gate heralded the coming of visitors to our Chinese house, hidden behind its walls of vermillion. Our "boy" announced the arrival of "gift men." The Chinese have such a delightful way of glorifying the most ordinary occurrences. No common peddlers, but the bearers of gifts. How the very name "gift men" tinsels the barker and trade with charm! Stately they come in—four of them with packs of blue swung across their backs.

There must be definite rules of etiquette for them to follow, else four anxious salesmen could never display their wares with such charming routine. If there are no rules then there is a rare heritage for their poets. There they stand, three of them, patiently waiting until the first brings forth his treasures as if he had all eternity in which to display them.

It takes skill to open a Chinese square. I have watched their long, narrow fingers undo knots that would have taxed the skill of sea-faring men. At last the dainty blue opened and like the drab moth that gave her gay butterfly to the world, so the work-a-day blue brought forth its charms of color.

There were small, embroidered sleevebags that might have brightened the pathway of many a rare old lacquered chopstick. There was a Mandarin skirt that would put any rainbow to shame, it glistened with so many gay colors; strips of vermillion, gold, purple and yellow ran side by side in stately unison. I withstood all temptation to buy until the old pearly red wedding coat came forth. It once boasted of a deeper hue, but the years had softened its brightness and lent it a luster that seemed almost too rare to last, like sunset colors in the tropics. It was covered with peaceful, old dragons that had crawled through their years in golden splendor. I wondered what little ivory princess wore it as she proudly stepped from her satin bridal chair. It must have been a princess because those old, golden dragons proudly displayed five claws and nothing but a dragon of royal lineage would have dared to possess five claws.

I wanted that coat. My eyes told of the beauty about which I dare not speak. Too many compliments are not good for these "gift men." Their prices are apt to soar very high indeed if they think their gifts are greatly desired. I asked him the price and he gave me an amount treble what he expected. I immediately became indignant to think he would ask such an outrageous price. Gradually we came nearer and nearer and nearer a common meeting place. This point of understanding was gained with many such expressions as:

"Sure you money! Very old—very old! Someone else—may be two times more. You friend of my very old friend. Last price—last price! Sure you money!"

At last the act was over and the stain coat fell into my lap—my very own. My little Oriental Bride! You could never have folded your wedding coat around you with more pride than I caressed my faded, golden splendor.

The head man came next. I could not help yielding to temptation. His beads of amber caught the rays from our bed of coals and mirrored an enchanting spell over me. I bargained and won them at my price. Then I saw the Mandarin chain! It was rare, old, spicy beads that had been carved until each one pantomimed a dozen Oriental myths. The four large beads of turquoise with their age-old mottling, lent a harmonizing blue and an ivory pendant with its yellowed lac carving hung from the string. I counted my money and found that I did not have enough. It mattered not a bit to this simple, trusting salesman. He smiled and told me I might sign a chit. A chit is merely a paper with a name or message written on it. He handed me a bit of worn envelope and I signed my name. Next month he will patiently trudge miles back to get his money.

It was the picture man's turn. He brought forth his aged prints, their colors dulled and moulded like the colors in an opal on a cloudy day. The old lady, bronzed background unrolled to show gay Chinese matrons with their coats of blue and orchid. Another scroll unfolded a dozen donkeys lazily trudging along, with now and then a dreamy driver. Sometimes it was a peaceful, country scene. I bought two scrolls and sent him away, sharing his trust with the head man.

The last man stumbled forward, hope lighting up his buff face of lantern wrinkles. He displayed three tawdry gifts. There was a tarnished brass saucer, a single crusty bread and a bright, blue bowl. I bought all three, but it proved to be a useless benevolence. He came the next week and the next, always with hope and unthought gifts.

Then they left us to share their gain with our "boy" gateman and cook. We had paid the extra gift tax. It is the acknowledged price of China, but O China! any price you ask would be small for the beautiful "gifts" I am bringing home and the lessons of courtesy and patience I am learning from my "gift men."

Meadow Silk

Written for The Christian Science Monitor.
Across a walt of tender green
Is shot a walt of blue,
With threads of gold and bronze between.
Woven the whole piece through.
'Brothered with sprigs of coral' red
And starred with daisy-bloom;
The waving silken tissue spread
Upon a meadow loom.

Stitched o'er with many a glistening bead,
Prismed by rainbow light;
What magic in the shuttle hid
To weave a silk so bright!

Salamanca

Of all the cities in Spain, none has retained its medieval aspect more completely than Salamanca. And, certainly, no town in the entire country is so lacking in self-consciousness or lives more completely aloof from modernism than this venerable city. . . .

Salamanca has age, for it was important enough in the third century B. C. to attract the attention of Hannibal, who captured it in 217. Afterwards, it became a city of the Roman province of Lusitania. Salamanca has culture, for its university has always been one of the greatest in Europe. Founded by Alphonso IX, in whose reign northern Spain was freed from Moorish rule. . . . It was subsequently enlarged, so that in the heyday of its glory in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, it housed thousands of students, from all over the civilized world, were enrolled in its twenty-five colleges. . . . Salamanca has charm, for it possesses the finest public square in Spain, an impressive number of interesting buildings, dating from the time of its greatest eminence, and a pleasantly street life that abounds in primitive and picturesque quality.

The city's center is the finely proportioned Plaza Mayor, the "Grand Place," a splendid quadrangle of tall arched buildings of the eighteenth century. Cade and shops line the colonnades and here, in the late morning and at the close of the afternoon, the townfolk come to take their ease. . . . as with indolent delight they watch the endless traffic that passes through the archways, dating from the time of its greatest eminence, and a pleasantly street life that abounds in primitive and picturesque quality.

Passing through the eastern portico of the square, you come to the market place. Surrounding a vast, covered building are broad thoroughfares, appropriated by the market folk who, because of preference, economy or lack of room inside the covered market, prefer to exhibit their wares under the open sky and within the arcades of the flanking buildings. In all Spain there is no market place that surpasses this one in the movement of its picturesque traffic and in the activity of its traders. . . . To this market, in the early morning hours, streams the traffic from the surrounding country; covered carts with circular canopies, like miniature prairie schooners, drawn by single mules or by two or three in tandem; diminutive donkeys, balanced by wicker or hempen panniers, bearing incredible loads of produce, their burdens frequently augmented by master or mistress, both mules and horses plodding soberly along, with backs piled high; small donkeys hitched to lumbering open carts; men, women and children, staggering under the weight of baskets and bundles, headed for the market or homeward bound; donkeys and mules, nosed thrust in great feed bags tied to their eyes, vigorously munching or standing contentedly idle. . . . a cinematograph of color and motion, constantly changing, quickly shifting, ever strange; a picture of the transportation methods and trading habits of a century ago. . . .

Salamanca's lack of self-consciousness lies to a great extent in her charming disorder. She has done little or nothing to assemble in studied array her wealth of splendid monuments that have descended the stairway of time, proclaiming the glory of her zenith in the distant past. It lies to some extent, also, in her seeming indifference to the traveler, for she makes no pretense whatever in receiving him. A town so rich in intellectual heritage and in historic glory might be expected to provide more modern hotels than those that now cater to the visitor. Her buildings, . . . are far from being on dress parade, but, on the contrary, seem, in their Old World setting, unconscious of their attraction, unpolished members of an architectural aristocracy, as if they have, for centuries, for the use and decoration of the people of the community. The irregularity of the streets, and the haphazard setting of the buildings are at variance with all sense of modern precision, and you feel conscious that time has wrought little change in Salamanca.

There is a pleasant harmony, too, in the color of the city. The materials that went into the construction of the venerable buildings of Salamanca . . . were all of the same light sandstone, the color of the desert sand, and the dominant tone is a soft reddish brown. The native stone of this color, which has been used in the north of Spain, may detract from the solemnity and grandeur of the cathedrals and other great edifices, but what is sacrificed in majesty is gained in friendly warmth—Robert Medill McBride, in "Spanish Towns and People."

Gain Through Blessing Others

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

SO GREAT is the human desire to be always gaining something, especially for nothing, that the temptation to gain at the expense of others too often seems to hold sway. When, however, humanity learns more of the divine nature, learns that immutable spiritual laws govern every phase of real existence, and that these laws maintain an exact balance in all activity, it will understand that only as it gains through blessing others can the achievement be progressive and lasting.

Christian Science reveals God as divine Mind, the only creator of the universe, and real creation as composed entirely of His spiritual ideas. Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of this great Science, writes in the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 468), "All is infinite Mind and its infinite manifestation, for God is All-in-all." Humanity as a whole calls the universe, including man, material, not spiritual; but despite this, it is becoming recognized that God, Mind, is the source of all reality. Human so-called mental activity is shown through divine Science to be but the counterfeit of divine Mind.

On page 287 of Science and Health we read: "When examined in the light of divine Science, mortals present more than is detected upon the surface, since inverted thoughts and erroneous beliefs must be counterfeits of Truth. Thought is borrowed from a higher source than matter, and by reversal, errors serve as way-marks to the one Mind." Thus we are encouraged in our search for Truth to seek the source of all true thoughts, thereby becoming able to subject all thoughts to the supreme test of perfection; and should they not measure up to the standard of the Golden Rule—doing unto others that which we would have done to ourselves—we must change our methods, or be found vainly striving against divine law, which is ever operative and supreme.

Again, on page 368 of Science and Health we read: "In the material world, thought has brought to light with great rapidity many useful wonders. With like activity have thought's swift pinions been rising towards the realm of the real, to the spiritual cause of those lower things which give impulse to inquiry. Belief in a material basis, from which may be deduced all rationality, is slowly yielding to the idea of a metaphysical basis, looking away from matter to Mind as the cause of every effect." Christian Science has brought to light the truth that Mind, divine intelligence, infinite good, God, not only has created all that is real but also governs all that is real, from the smallest to the greatest idea. This being so, there must be perfect balance, perfect equality, between ideas. For this reason Jesus taught, "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." And in Paul's epistle to the Galatians we read, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Here, then, is expressed for human guidance the same truth of perfect proportion and adjustment through spiritual law. Any seeming desire to profit at another's expense is thus seen to be running counter to the divine plan of Love; but the balance will eventually readjust itself with loss to him who thinks he can tilt it to his own advantage.

How soon would all the differences continually occurring between capital and labor be settled if each side would turn to the Science of Mind and seek the honest solution of the subject of gain! When this is accomplished, the employer will find himself fully compensated for his outlay of capital and responsibility, while the employee will receive the full reward for his labor, each blessing the other according to the laws of divine Mind, and to the satisfaction of all.

Nothing short of complete reciprocity is in accordance with the laws of divine Mind, wherein Love supplies all its ideas with all good. All just reward is in the hands of divine Principle; and employers who understand this take pleasure in paying fair wages to their employees, knowing that in giving them the opportunity to live comfortably and honestly, they are but according them the same rights they demand for themselves. Jesus said, "The laborer is worthy of his hire." In return, the employee strives to give honestly of his best work, and uses to the full advantage the time for which he is paid, whether under supervision or not, while his employer's interests will be his own goal of achievement. Thus does Christian Science open our understanding to a practical and sure way of honest living, whereby we need no longer feel ourselves without a guide in the smallest enterprise, nor grope in the dark for a remedy for every ill!

Eolus

Hoary is the harper at my window strumming.
Hoary as the frost or as the grizzling snow;
Older than the earth, older than the waters,
Lonely he wanders, strumming, strumming low.
Hear, oh, hear his music now so sweetly blending
With star-song ecstatic, with sun-song and sea.
Lyrics of moonlight and laughter of waters,
Earth-song ageless and joyous and free.

Harken with the voices of mothers resounding
Bird-song melodious, lullabies of rain,
Chansons of flowers and hymns of the grasses,
Footsteps of twilight and echo's refrain.
Happy now the murmur as of bright fires burning,
Chorus of crickets, symphonies of bees,
Chansons of fireflies in dew meadows,
Grace notes of falling snow, chants of the trees.

Habile is the harper at my window strumming,
Habile as Apollo or as the piping Pan;
Honor and love to him, wanderer lonely,
Strumming, strumming, strumming sweet songs for man!

Statues in the Desert

There was a morning of mornings when we lay opposite the rock-hewn Temple of Abu-Simbel, where the four great figures, each sixty feet high, sat with their hands on their knees. . . . At their feet is a little breadth of blue-green crop; they seem to hold back all the weight of the Desert behind them, which none the less, lies over at one side in a cataclysm of vivid orange sand. . . . The stars had blacked out when we began our watch; the river-birds were just whispering over their tollies in the uncertain purplish light. Then the river dimmed up like pewter; the line of the ridge behind the temple showed itself again; arched in mass in the sky; one felt rather than saw that there were four figures in the pit of gloom below it. These blocked themselves out, huge enough. . . . while the glorious ritual of the Eastern dawn went forward. Some roof of the bank revealed itself by reflection, black on silver; arched wings flapped and jarred the still water to splintered glass; the four figures stood clear, yet without shadowing, from their background. The stronger light flooded them red from head to foot. One felt that if by any miracle the dawn could be delayed a second longer, they would tear themselves free. . . . But that instant the full sun plumed them in their places—nothing more than statues blashed with light and shadows—and another day got to work—Rudyard Kipling, in "Letters of Travel."

"First the blade, then the ear, then the full grain in the ear"

PUBLISHED BY THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE PUBLISHING SOCIETY

EDITORIALS

The development of self-help and co-operation among the farmers of Saskatchewan during the past few years has been astounding, while the benefits therefrom have been beyond all expectations. There has been a great awakening which may be interpreted as a sign of the times. Some twenty-five years ago there was organized the Saskatchewan Grain Growers' Association, which served a social, educational and economic need of the farmers. A number of years after that followed the formation of the Saskatchewan Co-operative Elevator Company, Ltd., a line elevator company owned and operated by the farmers of the Province. This company was organized to combat the evils of the privately owned line elevators, and was made possible largely through what had been already achieved by the Grain Growers' Association.

At a still later date there occurred a division in this association, a certain section feeling that, in spite of what the farmers' organizations had done to date, they had not got to the root of the farmers' economic problems. Consequently there came into existence the Farmers' Union of Canada. This body was not satisfied that the farmer-owned elevator company had solved or was solving the wheat-marketing problem of the farmer.

The reputation of a well-known co-operative expert came to their notice a little more than three years ago. In order to defray the costs of bringing him to Saskatchewan, certain municipal bodies and business men of the Province made financial contributions, with the result that he came and addressed several meetings of farmers, business men and the public generally. Eventually, and as a direct result of his visit and following strictly his advice, the Wheat Pool was launched.

At this stage of development there were thus four large farmers' organizations—two pairs—which were more or less at opposites, viz.: Grain Growers' Association vs. the Farmers' Union, and Saskatchewan Co-operative Elevator Company, Ltd., vs. Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. This was obviously an undesirable situation, involving too many cross-currents and diverse interests, although all were presumably working in the interests of the farmers. This condition led to a common forecast among a certain section of the community that the farmers' organizations would eventually break up.

But not so; the farmers saw the dangers confronting them and began to take active steps toward their removal. The first step was taken when the farmer shareholders of the Saskatchewan Co-operative Elevator Company agreed by an 83 per cent majority to sell all the holdings of their company to the Wheat Pool. The second step is seen in the amalgamation of the Saskatchewan Grain Growers' Association and the Farmers' Union recently accomplished. The Wheat Pool and the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, are entirely separate and not in any way identical organizations; the one is a marketing agency and the other is an educational agency. Nevertheless, the realization of unity within the latter adds to the potentiality of the former.

Thus the story of the farmers' movement in Saskatchewan is truly a remarkable one, demonstrating that unity and co-operation can solve many of the farmers' problems. Indeed, it may not be too much to claim that co-operation will assist materially in the solution of the immigration problem in Canada (which is admittedly at the root of other national economic problems) by assuring the farmers of financial returns commensurate with the cost of production; by raising the standard of living on the farms and through the co-operative sense permeating the consciousness of the people that the best and noblest in its people will be developed to produce a happy and contented people; such favorable conditions will do much to attract settlers from other countries.

Not many years ago, as is well remembered, it was commonly believed that the time would soon come when wild game, in the United States, would be virtually extinct. The rapid dissemination of the herds following the settlement of arable government lands in the trans-Mississippi country and the more compact settlement of agricultural areas in the eastern and southern states, did portend the destruction of wild animals and birds generally. Deer had become scarce in many of the states; the buffalo or bison had been driven beyond the borders which civilization had set for itself; the nesting places of the wild pigeons were deserted, and the beaver had withdrawn from haunts where it was once plentiful.

But all at once, as it were, when this realization became impressed, the American public, through appropriate action taken by those agencies which had been wisely established, inaugurated a well-defined policy of conservation and protection. It was the determination of the people to restore, if possible, the remnants of these herds and flocks to something approximating their former numbers and size. The wild pigeon, it appears, has gone beyond recall. But of the other species named, as well as many others, a nucleus remained. Now comes the cheering announcement that rangers in the national forests and game preserves who have been taking a census of wild life in many parts of the country have found game animals, large and small, to be increasing in number. This counting of noses includes antelope, bear, caribou, deer, elk, moose, mountain goat, mountain sheep, and beaver. An interesting item in the report is that a total of 605,964 deer has been counted by the rangers, and that the Government's big game population is approximately 890,000, representing a gain of about 75,000 over the previous fiscal year.

It should be realized that while the Federal Government, in conjunction with the several states, has followed a generous and consistent policy in dealing with this problem of protection and conservation, the results achieved never would have been possible without the sympathetic aid of the people as a whole. The laws passed for the protection of game animals and birds have been virtually self-enforcing in most parts of the country. Violations have been reported and those who have offended have been punished, simply because there has been an aroused public sentiment behind the law.

Not all the wild life is embraced within the limits of national and state forests and preserves. The estimates made by the rangers do not include the animals which abound in increasing numbers outside their jurisdictions. In the case of the beaver, for instance, while the reports show an approximate total of 114,000 of these animals counted, it is estimated that half as many more of these are to be found in areas outside the national forests. Even the casual observer has noted the increase in the number of wild geese and ducks everywhere, and the growing friendliness of songbirds. It would be reassuring to believe that the ancient feud which so long existed between humans and the denizens of the woods and forests has at last come to an end. Perhaps it has.

Optimism marks the statement which Benito Mussolini, the Italian Premier, recently gave to an Associated Press correspondent as his view of the present European situation, and whether one is in full agreement with the Duce's views or not, one can hardly help but recognize the opinions as having been given in a spirit of sincerity. "Tell the people of America," he is quoted as saying, "that Europe is traversing a period of acute—most acute—crisis, but that I have firm faith that she will overcome her difficulties." It was, of course, only to be expected that he would lay especial emphasis on the relation of Fascism to the solving of the problems facing Europe, and again, whether or not one accords completely with his views in this connection, it is difficult not to acknowledge that there is ground for his statement that Fascism has given an example to the world in certain respects. One must, for instance, recognize that he had facts behind him when he asserted that Italy alone among the great nations of Europe is not torn by wasteful and dangerous political crises or ruinous strikes and lockouts.

As to whether his nation is marching unflinchingly toward a glorious future, only that future can determine. But if it is true that his nation has learned how to insure the participation of all types and classes of citizens, and how to keep their confidence, respect and obedience, it may surely be said that it has taken a step in a direction which, though going contrary to what has come to be commonly regarded as representing the highest ideals of government, may have been essential to that particular nation or group of people. It is not the place here to commend Fascism unqualifiedly or to characterize it as entirely without some merit. The fact is undeniable that it has produced at least a temporary improvement in conditions in Italy, and that those results have been largely built upon a broader vision of co-operation. "Under the old system," Mussolini stated, "individuals were able to render the state impotent by refusal to co-operate." And, presumably, under the "new," the state, by taking things into its own hands to an extent, it is true, that is utterly contrary to democratic ideals, has prevented such an eventuality.

The fundamental idea behind Fascism is in opposition to that sense of things which the modern world in large part has learned to accept as its birthright and heritage. That every great reform has always run counter to some established views is, however, unquestionable; but this does not carry with it the necessity that everything that runs counter to established views is an estimable reform. At the same time, it is no more than justifiable to accord credit where credit is due, and in his message to America Italy's chief has given expression to his views in a way that commands respect.

Secretary Mellon's strongest point against the McNary-Haugen bill, for stabilizing prices of farm products, was his assertion that government aid in marketing surplus crops in foreign lands would result in furnishing foodstuffs to the people of Europe at prices lower than those charged to domestic consumers. With an urban population in the United States nearly twice that of the farming regions, this warning against the possibility of a federal subsidy being used to provide cheap food for foreign workers was effective in assuring the opposition of Senators and Representatives whose constituents were chiefly dwellers in the cities or towns. Whatever policies looking to the improvement of American agricultural conditions may in the future be adopted, it may safely be predicted that there will be no arrangement for keeping up food prices at home, while selling a surplus for export at lower prices.

As might have been expected, representatives of the farmers have made answer to Secretary Mellon's objection by referring to the sale of American manufactures for export at substantially lower prices than they are sold for in the domestic market. A case in point is furnished by the hearing before a British commission under the Safeguarding of Industries Act, where a spokesman for the English hosiery industry submitted statements alleging that American cotton stockings were being imported at prices below the British cost of production. Whether the American stockings were being sold at a profit to the manufacturer, or were merely part of a surplus for which an outlet had to be found in foreign markets, did not appear to be known to the complaining witnesses. The situation, however, is much the same as that which might arise under a system of government aid to maintain prices of foodstuffs at home, while "dumping" the surplus abroad; and the farm leaders have been quick to seize upon the incident as an illustration of what they claim is less favorable treatment for agriculture than manufacturing.

The policy of selling for export at lower prices may be justified by special conditions in an industry that requires its operation to its full capacity, in order that production shall be efficient and labor constantly employed. It will be hard to convince the millions of stocking buyers in the rural regions, however, that it is unwise for the Government to aid in finding a market for surplus farm products while it is maintaining a policy that makes possible two sets of prices for manufactures.

How closely, indeed, is the vivid present linked with what, in the thoughts of many, seems like a remote past, by the presence, until yesterday, among the moving, active, toiling and pleasure-seeking people of this era, of Robert Todd Lincoln, who was the last surviving son of Abraham Lincoln. To him there remained through all the intervening years since the enactment of a tragedy that shocked civilization and sobered, perhaps forever, the wrath of a people plunged into bitter warfare, intimate memories of the martyred Emancipator which could not have been shared with even his closest associates. To him it must have been most gratifying to observe the esteem in which his distinguished father has come to be held by the people of all the world. Perhaps he knew, better than even the members of Lincoln's official family, and better than those who have sought in the years since he paid the price of his devotion to the cause of his people to paint a true word portrait of him, the secret of his greatness, the depth and breadth of his compassion.

Robert Todd Lincoln did his part of the work of the world. He claimed no particular distinction because of the eminence of his father. He was a lawyer of recognized ability and standing, had served as Secretary of War in the Cabinets of President Garfield and President Arthur, and later as Minister to Great Britain. His service as special counsel for the Pullman Company led to his election as president of that organization as successor to its founder. Later he was associated in an official capacity with other large industrial concerns and with one of the leading banks of the country. For some years Mr. Lincoln maintained a summer home at Manchester, Vt., almost in the shadow of Mt. Equinox. It was to this charming spot that he retired for that rest, recreation and reflection which he had abundantly earned and which he so greatly enjoyed. To him there must have come, more clearly than to others, the realization of what one man, possessing courage, vision and devotion, can accomplish by ungrudging fidelity to duty. Abraham Lincoln, as his son well knew, did not regard himself as a superhero or as one endowed with prescient knowledge. He did not choose or shape his own or his people's destiny. He simply stood, as brave men and women throughout the ages have stood and must stand, ready and willing to defend the right.

Perhaps the son of the Emancipator knew, better than any other person who has survived that time of stress and disaster, the simple process by which a patient and unselfish man rises above the sordid and embroiling bitterness which surrounds him, to point the way of release. He knew, no doubt, that the glory which is Lincoln's is not the reflection of any selfish glorification. Abraham Lincoln never realized that he had achieved greatness. His reward, if so it may be termed, was the realization that each day he did his best in the way he knew. No father can leave a richer heritage than this. No son can do better than to cherish and preserve, as Robert Lincoln did, the gift which he shared with all the people whom his distinguished father loved.

Editorial Notes

If ever an attempt to pour oil on troubled waters was deserving of success, it would seem to be so in the case of the British publications, the Economist, the Nation, and the New Statesman, in their recent editorials deprecating the recent attacks on the United States in the British Parliament and in the newspapers on the debt question. "America's attitude," says the Economist, "certainly will not be improved by irritating comments from this side. Such comments merely have the effect of making the position more difficult for those who are genuine friends of Europe." The Nation protests against abusing the United States as a "Shylock," and argues that the British Government itself has driven a hard bargain with France by taking advantage of her present predicament in needing foreign credits. The New Statesman, after deploring the fact that certain expressions had been heard in Parliament, stated that "they merely serve to irritate American opinion without serving any useful purpose." A few more such healing sentiments on both sides of the Atlantic would do more than all kinds of critical theorizing to clear up the situation.

While fully recognizing that much more than money returns must be reckoned with when discussing the wisest expenditure of capital, one is justified in calling attention to a statement made recently, according to Railway Review, by Herbert Hoover, United States Secretary of Commerce. Here is the substance of it: People talk glibly of giving billions of credit to foreign countries to increase the farm exports of the United States, but a billion dollars spent upon American railways will give more employment to the people of the country, more advance to its industry, more assistance to its farmers, than twice that sum expended outside the frontiers of the United States—and there would be greater security for the investor. This statement is put out with Mr. Hoover assuming "full responsibility" for it. And it certainly gives the reader something to think about.

The Smith Family and Its Family Tree

WHEN Harold Smith chuckled to himself like a muted bassoon, it was usually an indication that he was tickled by something which sooner or later he would impart and which would either burden or benefit his audience. I waited patiently until he had finished reading the letter which at the moment claimed his attention.

"Just look at this, will you?" he said, handing me the neatly typed communication. I read as follows:

My dear Mr. Smith: I have for disposal an old and very interesting chart of your family tree, dating from 1444. This chart is prepared in colors, on heavy antique paper, and backed with canvas; it measures six feet by four. In one corner is a beautifully executed design representing the Smith family coat-of-arms. This chart I will be pleased to send you on receipt of your check for $10. Hoping to hear from you at an early date, Yours very truly, (Signed) Matthew Moody, Genealogist and Antiquarian.

"Very interesting," I observed without much enthusiasm; "but where's the joke?"

"Joke! Why, my dear fellow, don't you see how absurd it is to try and commercialize the 'Smith' family tree? It isn't a tree at all, but a huge forest! That's the beauty of the whole business; every Smith stands on his own feet, whereas, of some individuals, it might be said: He stands for fame on his grandfather's feet. By hereditary proof, of course."

"Why, I'm not even a Kay-Smith, or a Smith-Porter; I'm just a plain Smith. And even if I could trace my family back to 1444, I think I should be inclined to endorse the opinion that Sheridan expresses in 'The Rivals': 'Our ancestors are very good kind of folks, but they are the last people I would choose to have a visiting acquaintance with.'"

"Yes, but this family tree, coming as it would from a presumably honest genealogist, must be somebody's tree, and it might as well be yours as any other Smith's," I remarked, rather lamely, I admit.

"I don't want a family tree," Harold replied with emphatic decision. "I don't want to be bound by precedents. Just think of it: a young man with 'traditions' to live up to conceives a perfectly gorgeous idea which bids fair to provide him with all kinds of happy identity, only to be solemnly told, by some member of the family whose main occupation appears to be to see that all the other members conform to the tradition, 'That's the sort of thing a — never does!' No, sir! Nobody can say to me, 'That's the sort of thing a Smith never does,' because there isn't anything a Smith hasn't done."

"Oh, come, don't speak too slightly of your human ancestry," I replied. "I am quite willing to concede that 'he who boasts of his descent, praises the deeds of another'; I admit, with you, that the passwords to enduring character are thoughts and deeds, not pedigree; nevertheless, isn't there some little satisfaction in looking on a portrait of a dignified and imposing person in lace ruffles and high-crowned hat, and being able to say, 'He's one of the family'?"

"That's because you don't know him," answered Harold, with that finality that would lead one to suspect that he had a reserve of hidden information which was not for public consumption. "Distance often lends enchantment to one's ancestors. The man who professes to be able to trace his descent from Pocahontas would be quite seriously disturbed if you told him that his mother was an Indian. But even a rascal may be tolerated if he is far enough down the family tree."

"Then, looking at it from another angle: in America the quintessence of respectability is to be able to trace one's family back to the Mayflower, or the James Bay Colony; but if all —"

At this point I deemed it wise to interrupt, for I knew Harold's possibilities in extempore argument. "By the way, has your particular branch of the family a coat of arms?"

Harold walked over to the bookcase, searched the shelves for several seconds, and finally withdrew an old volume bound in leather. Opening it, I saw, pasted on the flyleaf, a book-plate, the composition of which was the armorial bearings of one, Josiah Smith, of Devonshire, England.

"The alleged coat of arms of my family," he said, with mock solemnity.

"Why 'alleged'?" I asked.

"Because Sidney Smith—who you will readily admit was an authority, being one of the Smiths of his day—said, 'The Smiths never had any arms, and have invariably sealed their letters with their thumbs.'"

"What are you laughing at?" demanded Harold, noting my ill-concealed amusement.

"It sounds rather like police investigation methods, doesn't it?"

"Precisely, and for the reason that the most individual physical characteristic about a person—though not usually evident—is a thumbprint. A plain Smith can make an impression on a piece of wax, more individual than any heraldic device. But remember this, it is worth no more than the most ancient emblazoned seal, if considered as an outward sign of an inward grace."

"The family of Smith is, to all intents and purposes, untraceable, and every Smith must stand on his own feet and establish his own claim to recognition; all of which is a very good thing for Smith."

"But isn't there just a little inconsistency here?" I ventured to remark. "Here is a copy of a Smith coat of arms—a plain Smith. Doesn't this establish a family connection that may be traced back along a genealogical path to an early century?"

Harold's eye twinkled as he replied: "If your Latin is not too rusty, read the motto on the scroll below the heraldic device."

I read, "Vestigia nulla retrorsum."

"Well," said Harold after a pause.

"A free translation, I suppose, would be, 'There is no past,'" I replied.

"You're right. Literally, 'There are no traces backward.' Now do you see why I have preserved this, the only copy of our coat of arms that I possess?"

In thinking it over, I have come to the conclusion that the particular Mr. Smith who chose this as his family motto in an earlier century must have been an exceedingly wise man.

The World's Great Capitals: The Week in Paris

WORK has begun on a new underground railway which will enable Parisians to live in the suburbs. It is strange that the French capital, which is particularly well supplied with an elaborate underground railway system by which residents can swiftly get from any point to any other point, should have so few facilities for getting beyond the walls of the town. The fortifications have largely been razed and no longer exist, but such is the force of habit that Paris still thinks of itself as a walled city. It does not consider anything that lies on the other side of the imaginary ring to be connected with Paris. It frowns upon the suburbs. Only lately has this peculiar insularity of the city been broken down, but the means of communication with the smaller communities which are springing up outside the walls are painfully lacking. Therefore it is worthy of record that there has just been cut the first of an extraordinary metro line. It was cut in the Place Monge by the Roman amphitheater. When the line is completed Paris workers will be able to live at Ivry, and lines to other suburbs may soon be cut.

The thin notes of the tiny trumpet of the Paris chair-mender have, for an old resident, sentimental associations, and it is therefore with pleasure that the writer learns that the little pipe of a chair-mender has been restored to him by the prefect of police. The chair-menders blowing on their primitive instrument got from street to street and the housewives bring out their cane-bottomed chairs which in the midst of the traffic the chair-mender mends. Somehow one would not like to see him disappear. He is a link with the past, a reminder of more leisurely days. But a policeman, perhaps unpoetic but doubtless with a proper conception of the needs of the age, looked upon the chair-mender's trumpet as a public nuisance. He confiscated the trumpet and it was understood that no longer would the itinerant craftsmen be allowed musically to announce their presence. When the prefect of police himself heard of the orders that had been given in his name he showed himself to have a poetic sense and perhaps not a sufficient sense of the needs of the age: he ordered the trumpet to be restored, implying that it might be blown by the chair-menders to their heart's content. The prefect has won golden opinions—but one wonders whether his action will be indorsed by the superior authorities.

The Victor Hugo Museum in the Place des Voies is, on the occasion of the centenary celebrations of Romanticism, to be enlarged. Unquestionably the celebrations could be held in no worthier place than the house in which Hugo lived from 1833 to 1885, and where he wrote many of his masterpieces. Some of the most renowned literary and artistic figures of France have foregathered in this house. There are souvenirs of Lamartine, Musset, Balzac, George Sand, Théophile Gautier. It is true that the Romantic movement is generally dated six or seven years earlier than the year in which Hugo took up his abode in the Place des Voies. The Preface to "Cromwell," in which Hugo arraigned the classical forms of dramatic art, may be said to be the definite point of departure. But it is with this house that Hugo is most definitely associated in Paris. New rooms are to be added and the collection of relics increased.

Visitors to Paris usually suppose the splendid Bois de Boulogne to be ancient. In its present form it is, on the contrary, comparatively new. We are reminded of this by the decision to place an inscription bearing the name of Varré, the great landscape architect, on the rock in the big lake in the Bois. The idea of providing Paris with a great playground was due to Napoleon III. He was struck by the "Londoners' enjoyment of Hyde Park. He conceived the notion of making the Bois de Boulogne into a vast garden, with superb winding thoroughfares, straight avenues, shady pathways, open spaces, and ornamental lakes. The land passed into the hands of the city in 1852, and it was then that he entrusted the work of converting the wood into its present shape to Varré, who was assisted by Baron Haussmann, to whom Paris owes most of its fine thoroughfares.

Lawbreaking and the Prohibition Party

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

The writer has had at least forty-five years of fairly good understanding, and experience among men. During all of this time the subject of prohibition has been one of lively interest in every community in which he has lived and moved. He has had experience under the Duncan Act, and the Scott Act, local option laws in Canada, and he has lived under one and another legal form of liquor control, from the regular licensing of saloons to operate under certain legal stipulations, to state and national prohibition laws in the United States for quite a number of years.

Under no form of license or control has he ever known bar or saloon keepers, in Canada or the United States, to be willing to observe the law. Every exception to this rule in the business has been recognized as a liquor dealer of unusual character, and referred to in a tone of respect by nearly every one mentioning his name.

Lawbreaking and the liquor business have gone hand in hand through all the years of my experience, no matter what the character of the laws has been. Men of experience understand that this is a true statement, and ought to remember the past when the present orgy of law violation and bootlegging is mentioned to them.

The practice of sending young children to bars and saloons for buckets of beer is an old one, a fact for people to remember in the face of arguments that prohibition is making drunkards of children today. Admitting as true every charge that is made that boys and girls are drinking liquors under the Volstead Law and the Eighteenth Amendment, then what? Is it the law, or a lawbreaker that is at fault? Has a moral sense a right to give expression to itself at the polls in a democracy or republic? When it has done so, under the law, and won, what are the obligations of citizenship toward the law which is passed as a result of that exercise of a legal right?

If boys and girls are drinking liquors in the United States today, it is because someone is making and selling liquors for gain, in violation of the laws of the land. If it be true that the law is being violated to the extent that its enemies would have us believe, and that many of its friends seem to fear that it is, it is because the moral sense of the country is not well enough organized to secure its enforcement.

The moral sense that enacted the law is still in the land; it has no pleasure in law violation, nor profit in moonshine or bootlegging. Has it become paralyzed under the loud boast of the lawbreaker, or does it await the voice of a leader, a strong organizer, to weld it into an aggressive moral power and lead it to a victory that will be heard around the world—in the enforcement of law?

Is prohibition revolution? Very well—progressive revolution is no stranger to the English-speaking peoples. The United States of America were ushered into being through generations of controversy, and seven years of active revolution. If the moral sense of that Nation has written a new virtue into the Constitution which was adopted by the convention of 1787, must it be nullified by the practice of its enemies, at home and abroad, who cannot appreciate its character—and honor it?

Prohibition is no longer a subject for controversy in the United States: prohibition is today the law of the land, and the only question to settle concerning it is: What is the best method to adopt to insure strict and universal observance of the law?

If law observance can only be insured through law enforcement—then perhaps that drastic policy must be adopted on some really revolutionary scale.

If prohibition is revolution, the Monitor's recent editorial suggestion—that the Prohibition Party be revived—is logical. Though it never had a President in the White House, nor very many lawmakers in either branch of Congress, the work of that party is responsible for the law. Could there be a more appropriate development than would be a policy that would secure to its keeping the care and success of its child?
